"Does it Pay to Handle Bread?" is a Question that Many Retail Merchants are Constantly Asking Themselves—How One Grocer Established a Bakery in Connection With His Store and Makes It Pay

"DOES it pay to handle bread?" That is a question many retail merchants have been asking themselves and has been the subject for debate at meetings of Retail Grocers' Associations in various cities throughout the Dominion. The majority of merchants are agreed that the margin of profit allowed by the bakers is not sufficient to warrant them selling bread. Some merchants handle a large quantity of bread, while there are others who only handle it as a convenience to customers—on occasions when customers run short or neglect to take enough from their regular baker.

Costs Are Too Great

There was a time when bread cost the merchant four cents and sold for five cents a loaf, the merchant being content with making one cent on the loaf. But paper and twine are now three times the former price. Bread is twice the price, and the margin of profit on each loaf is practically the same. It is obvious that the percentage of profit is at least cut in half.

The grocers in Ottawa have met this problem by establishing their own bakeshop. In Toronto, in certain sections, merchants have agreed to purchase their bread from one baker who is allowing them a larger profit than other bakers, providing they purchase all their requirements from him. The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association is working on such a plan that they hope will be a benefit to all the merchants throughout the city.

Wanted 20 Per Cent.

In Hamilton the association some months ago decided that they would discontinue to handle bread unless some better arrangements in regard to margin of profit could be made with the bakers. The bakers refused to listen to the merchants, so they decided that on a certain day they would not take any bread. This, however, failed to materialize. On the morning set aside for the experiment one merchant stated to his baker that he did not intend to handle bread unless he was allowed 20 per cent. profit. His request was immediately met by the baker. Other bakers, however, did not follow and merchants generally are still selling bread on a 10 per cent. margin.

George A. Gow was one of the merchants who agreed to discontinue selling bread unless the bakers would allow 20 per cent. margin of profit and he adhered to it. For eight months Mr. Gow did not sell bread. He said he lost a few customers, but the loss of the customers' trade was not nearly as great as selling the quantity of bread he was handing out at a profit of 10 per cent.

Establishes Bake Shop

Mr. Gow then decided that it would be a good move to establish a bake shop to supply his own trade. This he proceeded to do. At the rear of the store was a room that could be fitted up with ovens and other necessary paraphernalia. He hired an experienced bread, pastry and cake baker, also a helper. One side of the store and a window was appropriated to the selling of the products of the bake shop.

The only advertising that is used is the windows and he has built up a profitable business on bread and cakes that otherwise were showing him a considerable loss.

During the winter and entertaining season, the store specializes on patty shells, small fancy cakes and in fact can turn out any line on special order that the hostess may desire.

Canadian Grocer would like to hear from merchants in other centres on the bread problem.

Against Unsanitary Method

There is another angle that the bread situation can be viewed from and one that the

"Undermines Confidence in Competitor"

British Columbia Retailers Meet in Vancouver, B.C., and Air Their Grievances in Regard to Unfair Competition—"The Man Who Sells Goods For Less Than Cost Is Guilty of an Immoral Act," Says One Retailer.

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER (Special).—There is the persistent complaint to be heard that two or three downtown cash-and-carry and self-serve grocery stores are weaning away the trade from the neighborhood grocer. Paul Findlay says many of the smaller grocers are entirely engrossed from the neck down, and the steady falling off in their cash business has bewildered them. The counter schemes propounded by many retailers are varied. These remedial measures range from legislation (whatever that may mean) to co-operative buying.

Affects Suburban Stores

The best-informed suburban grocers also feel the cash-and-carry, cut-price competition keenly, and realize that the present scheme of distribution is being seriously menaced by the weakening of the small grocer's position. These latter merchants felt, however, that some good could be done by a frank discussion of present conditions with the departmental store representatives and, later, with the jobbers.

Judging by the tenor of the remarks one hears from the retail grocers, he would have expected that the opportunity to meet the representatives of their greatest competitor would have attracted large numbers of the struggling retailers to the session. Such was not the case.

While customer after customer ceased to buy her groceries from the neighborhood grocer, with the simple statement that she could save money downtown, the merchant talked to the travellers and specialty men about what should be done and what the merchants should get together and say. However, when the call went forth that this special session was for the discussion of this very matter, and that the managers of the offending competitors would be on hand to answer for their misdemeanors, or explain their position, a mere handful of merchants put in an appearance, and most of them were from "up-country," where this severe competition is felt least.

Department Store Men Present

When the meeting convened, with Victor Spencer and Mr. Woodward, representing the two large departmental stores, present, a silence prevailed that could be felt. The silence lengthened, and at last Mr. Woodward spoke, suggesting that probably someone had something to say. Geo. McKenzie, of Kelowna, B.C., who is well-known to Canadian Grocer readers, took the floor and in a few brief remarks stated the ethics of the retail grocery business better than many could state them in a half day. A few of the gems that Mr. McKenzie left with the meeting are well worth repeating:

Guilty of an Immoral Act

"The man who sells goods for less than their cost to him is guilty of an immoral act, because he undermines public confidence in his competitor."

"Public confidence is the bond, which, if broken, destroys society. And if any man so conducts his business as to weaken confidence in the merchandising system here, he does me, his competitor, an irreparable injury."

Mr. Spencer was called out of the meeting to answer a 'phone call but said, before stepping out, "I am not leaving now to side-step any issue. Any time the retail grocers of this city wish to talk to me I will drop anything I am doing and come to the meeting."

"Know Nothing About the Business"

Mr. Woodward said: "The trouble with the retail grocery business in Vancouver is that 75 per cent. of the men in the retail grocery business do not know anything about the business, and are unable to meet competition.

"You have service departments," he said, "credit and delivery, and you give these to the public for nothing. It has been stated that grocery sections are run by departmental stores as "baits" to get customers to other parts of the stores. This is not a fact. Every department in a properly conducted departmental store must pay."

The final arrangement made at this meeting was that a committee of lower mainland retailers would be appointed to go into the matter further with the departmental stores, as the managers of these stores signified their willingness to assist toward a solution.

This Season Will See a Good Steady Trade

E. W. Jeffress, of E. W. Jeffress Limited, Walkerville, Ont., has just returned east from a two months business trip to Western Canada as far as the Coast. Speaking of business conditions, he stated they were on the whole exceedingly good and that this season would see a good steady trade. "Wholesalers naturally are not buying in such large quantities as in the past," he said, "but they are now buying frequently, which indicates a healthy condition."

"I was talking to one of Winnipeg's high-class retailers on the subject of selling the expensive lines and he told me that this spring sales had been considerably better than last fall. He had made a substantial purchase of a high-class line and was selling it, whereas in the fall scarcely anybody would buy."

Things are booming around Edmonton, Mr. Jeffress said. This was due in part to the opening of the oil fields to the north. The hotels there were well filled and large quantities of supplies were being sent up to the oil country.

In British Columbia, too, he found the trade in a healthy condition. "In fact," he added, "I believe that today the Western trade is more stabilized than that in the East."

CLAIM MARGIN ON BREAD IS TOO SMALL

retail trade is vitally interested in. Public sentiment is rather against the unsanitary method in which bread is handled, claiming that all bread should be wrapped at the factory, thus eliminating the possibility of contamination through handling and distribution through the streets in open wagons. Wrapping of bread at the factory would also tend to increase the profit to the merchant as no other wrapper would be necessary. The high cost of paper and twine is perhaps the big feature in handling bread by the trade and if the wrapping could be done away with bread would then become a profitable line to handle, instead of unprofitable as many merchants state.

This side of the bread question will be taken up in another article and Canadian Grocer requests every reader to cut out the coupon and send in their views on this all important subject.

Handling Cereals in Warm Weather

Scrupulous Cleanliness is Essential in Order That Stock May Be Kept in First-class Condition—A Spring Cleaning in a Grocery is as Necessary as in a Private House

MONTREAL, April 25.—With the coming of the warmer weather and the summer months, almost every grocer entertains some concern as to the quality of the cereals, meals and flour carried in his stock. Many grocers have had in previous summers experience with insects or the weevil. The latter is seen in the form of stringy matted rolled oats or in corn meal. This trouble is principally caused by unscientific storage. The grocer should remember that flour, meal and most cereals are particularly subject to outside influences and can only be kept satisfactorily by scrupulous care in their handling and storage. It will be of interest to note that the most perishable lines are those which contain a high percentage of fats, moisture or outer coatings of grain. To help the grocer protect himself against such losses Canadian Grocer representative asked one cereal manufacturer for some instructions regarding the care of these lines.

A Spring Cleaning

This manufacturer said, "Along this line I think the strong point of precaution is that it is just as important and just as necessary for the grocer to have a spring cleaning in his store as it is for the householder, and if spring cleaning were made as much an annual institution with the grocer as it is with the householder the grocer's losses and troubles from deterioration would be materially lessened throughout the summer months.

Some Preventive Measures

"Flours and meals should be stored in a cool dry place which is at the same time well ventilated. Warehouses should be swept clean and whitewashed before these products are placed therein. Large supplies should not be accumulated and care should be taken to see that the old stock is completely sold out before the new supply is placed on sale. When package goods are placed on the shelves the grocer should take care to see that the older stock is placed at the front and not piled behind the fresh stock. All packages on the shelves should be regularly dusted to remove all germs that may collect on the outside and which will in time work their way to the contents.

"Flours and meals which contain the outer bran coatings and germ of the grain will not keep so well as when these are removed. Whole wheat flour sterilized in the process of manufacture will keep much longer than the ordinary whole wheat product. Corn meal and corn flour made of kiln-dried corn and which have the germ removed will keep better than the same products made from corn which has not been so dried and degerminated.

"Special care should be taken of the following products and these should be kept moving or be used as soon as practicable and should not be allowed to accumulate in the warehouse: Bran, shorts and middlings, corn products containing the outer coatings and germ and such so-called water-ground corn meal and grits, etc., oats and oat meals, graham and whole wheat flours, rye flour, barley flour, peanut meal, soy bean meal.

"As mentioned before, the store-room and shelves should be kept clean and whitewashed if the insects once appear. The placing of a little slack lime on the shelf with the cereals in the hot weather will be found an excellent insect preventive. When the place is swept and dusted all the sweepings should be carefully removed or burnt, since it contains the larvae and eggs of the destructive agents. It is well to remember one other thing, however, that cereals absorb the odors and taints of other goods and therefore must be kept away from onions, fruits, soap, kerosene and any other odorous articles.

Cleanliness the Secret

"The meat of the matter, as I have already said, is cleanliness. Whitewashing and the use of slack lime are involved in the word "cleanliness." Most of the cereal packages today are sterilized and are sealed and wrapped so that trouble that does develop mainly comes from the outside in and not from the inside out."

"The Power of Suggestion" in Creating Sales of Merchandise

A GREAT deal is heard about "the power of suggestion" and how it should be applied to every day business especially in connection with creating sales of merchandise. It is a fact, however, that many merchants are very enthusiastic over this one point and are taking every possible means of suggestion to affect a sale on articles that are kindred to the article that is requested by the customer.

To put on a special sale of one article and then concentrate selling efforts on another article that can be used in its preparation, is a plan that is carried to a successful climax in the store of Robert Kirby, Sarnia, Ont., almost every week end. Recently Mr. Kirby had an opportunity to purchase some sixty cases of canned tomatoes at a price that permitted him to sell them at a lower price than usual and yet leave a satisfactory profit.

One window was attractively trimmed with the tomatoes with a price card attached. This resulted in the sale of eighteen cases on the Saturday. But here is where the real salesmanship comes in. It was suggested to every purchaser of tomatoes that soda biscuits when used in the preparation of tomatoes made an appetizing dish. Even the name of the dish was suggested as baked tomatoes, scalloped tomatoes, tomato soup, etc.

The price of the soda biscuits was not cut. The regular price was received for every package. The result of this selling effort was the means of selling 10 cases each containing 36 one pound packages of soda biscuits—a total of 432 tins of tomatoes and 360 packages of soda biscuits for the day's special, not a bad day's business.

Some merchants may argue that it is no trick to sell a large quantity of goods by cutting the price and therefore reducing the profit. Mr. Kirby however, does not figure that way. He maintains that there is no advantage to be gained in launching a special unless it shows a certain percentage of profit. The goods that are put on special sale are those that are purchased at a special price, either by quantity or from some wholesaler or manufacturer, who wishing to reduce stock is willing to sacrifice the price. The "snaps" he picks up from time to time and uses them as a special. But as explained above Mr. Kirby does not stop at the special. He uses his initiative to force the sales on other lines.

A short time ago Mr. Kirby purchased a quantity of a certain brand of macaroni, dressed a window with it and used his selling ability to such good advantage that 15 cases were sold during the last three days of the week. "With practically every third package of macaroni," Mr. Kirby stated, "a package of biscuits and a pound of cheese were sold."

Another Saturday a window was dressed with honey put up in ten pound tins, and all hands proceeded to talk honey on that day. This resulted in moving 50 tins on that day.

Amendment Affects Fruit Containers

New Regulations in Inspection and Sale Act Designate Sizes and Dimensions of Apple Barrels, Boxes, Crates and Other Containers of Fresh Fruits

AN act to amend the Inspection and Sale Act has recently been passed in parliament, and affects the containers of apples and fresh fruits. Italian War Veterans Form Grocery Firm

Montreal, April 27.—A new company has been formed in this city to handle all grocery lines and it is expected that they will later handle other imported lines. This is to be known as the Italian War Veterans' Co-operative, Ltd., and has received its charter as such. The offices are situated at 230 St. Paul Street West. The director, and the only one of the officials who is not a war veteran, is Barone E. D'Emarese, who has been for some years with Laporte Martin Limited. His son, Mario D'Emarese, an ex-lieutenant of the Italian territorials, is secretary-treasurer. The other directors are Enrico Meneghini, also an ex-lieutenant, president; F. Testa and A. Sacca, both of the Italian Army. All of these young men have received the Italian war cross and were wounded in the war.

The stock, amounting to $20,000, is held by local Italians, most of whom are in business in this city. The association was first formed to aid Italian war veterans but it was recognized that sufficient funds could not be collected to carry on the work without entering some business venture and consequently this firm was established. Five per cent. of the earnings of the company will be devoted to the work of the Veterans' Association.

As the shares in the company are issued in small amounts and as no large sums have been invested by any of those interested there are many Italians holding an interest in the company. The company has the official recognition of the War Veterans' Association in Italy and it is expected that through them they may be able to obtain a number of agencies for Italian firms in this country and will also facilitate the import trade that the association intends to develop.

WARM ARGUMENT ON THE SUBJECT OF MAPLE SUGAR

Ottawa, April 27.—Members of parliament discussed maple sugar for an hour. Argument got quite warm, too, not about the resolution moved, but about which county in Canada made the best sugar. Three Liberal members, Messrs. Beland, McMaster and Robb, who are usually agreed, got all wrought up over the qualities of the maple products from their respective counties.

Unfortunately for Ontario, not a member from this province opened his mouth to defend the splendid maple products produced here, and as far as the house is concerned it still thinks Quebec makes the only maple sugar in Canada.

The argument arose over the resolution of Dr. Beland that maple products, not entirely pure, could be sold, as long as the contents were named on the bottle, as in patent medicines. He thought it would enlarge the market for maple products.

Favors One Per Cent. Turnover Tax

Taxation Committee of Toronto Board of Trade Propose Abolition of Business Profits War Tax and Present Income Tax, Replacing Them With Turnover Tax and New Graduated Income Tax

TORONTO, April 26.—Recommending that the business profits war tax should be abolished, the present system of income tax repealed, and the special war tax, in so far as it affects sales should also be done away with, the taxation committee of the Board of Trade brought down its report at its meeting this week. In place of these forms of taxation it is suggested that a turnover tax of one per cent. be levied on all commodities, and a graduated system of income tax be put into force on all forms of income, no matter how derived. The proposed turnover tax of one per cent. affecting all branches of trade and industry is directly the opposite of that proposed by the Dominion Retail Merchants' Association, who assert that the only fair method of collecting this tax is at the source of supply.

The resolution was not passed at this meeting. Much discussion, for and against, took place. Another meeting will be held next Tuesday, when the matter will again be considered.

Hugh Blain, of Eby-Blain, Ltd., wholesale grocers, offered in amendment that a tax of five per cent. should be placed on goods at the original source, the factory. He cited the case of wholesale grocers, stating that it had been proven that nearly all of them operated on a profit of less than half of one per cent. on their turnover. "How can we take a one per cent. tax away from that?" he asked.

The Committee's Report

The report in the main points out that the Business Profits War Tax was levied as a war measure largely with the object of securing a portion of the extraordinary profits in many cases made from the manufacture of munitions and other war materials, and that both the Business Profits War Tax, and the Income Tax as at present administered are unduly onerous and complicated and some features of them are fundamentally unsound.

The Board of Trade fully recognizes that provision must be made for the raising of revenue sufficient to provide not only for the necesssary expenditure arising out of the war—i.e., war pensions and interest charges on Canada's war debt, but also for the reduction within a reasonable time of the heavy burden of debt incurred because of the war.

But it is desirable that every resident of Canada should contribute equitably and fairly towards the raising of the necessary revenue. The requirements of a good tax system are that it be fair to all; that the burden be universally distributed, and that collection be simple and easy, instead of being complicated and irritating.

The Resolution Proposed

The Board of Trade of Toronto is of the opinion, and respectfully submits that as it is now over fourteen months since peace was signed with Germany, the Business Profits War Tax should not be re-enacted and that—for many reasons, a few of which are set out below under their respective headings — the Special War Tax in so far as it affects sales, and the Income Tax as at present administered should be repealed, and in lieu thereof the Board would suggest the following systems of taxation:—

(a) Turnover or Sales Tax on all commodities.
(b) Graduated Income Tax.

Turnover or Sales Tax

This tax as at present administered is not sufficiently broad in its operation. The Board therefore suggests in lieu thereof the following:—

A Turnover Tax on all goods, wares and merchandise imported into Canada, manufactured in Canada, produced in Canada, or traded in in Canada; such tax to be paid monthly by all manufacturers, wholesale merchants, jobbers, retail merchants, traders, pedlars and dealers in any such goods, wares or merchandise. The rate suggested for this tax is 1 per cent. on the turnover of each of said manufacturers, merchants, etc.

With the object of encouraging agricultural pursuits said Turnover Tax should not be levied on farmers in respect of their products, nor should it be applicable to goods exported from Canada, or goods imported into Canada, for process and export.

Take Out Licenses

In order that this tax may be effectively collected and that no dealers in such goods, wares and merchandise may escape same, the Board is of the opinion that all manufacturers, wholesale merchants, jobbers, retail merchants, traders, pedlars, and other dealers in any such goods, wares or merchandise—with the exception of individual farmers disposing of their own products—should be required to take out a license authorizing them to transact such business, the cost of such license to be a nominal sum, say $1.00 per annum. Every such company, partnership or person taking out such license should be required to keep a record of the transaction or transactions of the business done under such license. At the end of each month every such licensee should be required to send a remittance for 1% of the amount of such sales to the nearest tax collector with a statement of the volume of such sales for the month.

Income Tax

The present Income Tax is unduly onerous and complicated, especially the surtax and supertax features thereof, and in the case of large incomes practically amounts to consfication. This is undesirable as it will tend to discourage the flow of outside capital into Canada and will probably result in driving capital therefrom.

The calculation necessary to determine the amount due in respect of income under the present system is very intricate and is frequently misunderstood by the average person, with the result that there will inevitably be friction and dissatisfaction on the part of the public generally.

The Board therefore suggests in place of such tax a graduated Income Tax, to be assessed, levied, and paid upon the income during the preceding year of every person residing or ordinarily resident in Canada or carrying on any business in Canada, a graduated tax, to be assessed, levied and paid upon the incomes of the preceding year, in accordance with a schedule incorporated in the resolution. This table begins with an income of over $1,000 and not over $5,000 on which a tax of 1 per cent. should be levied with a minimum of $10 per year. The percentage increases by halves of one per cent. up to incomes of between $95,000 and $100,000, on which 18½ per cent. should be paid, or a minimum of $17,576. From this figure on to incomes of between $900,000 and $1,000,000 the percentages on each step of $50,000 increase by 1 per cent. graduations, giving a 40 per cent. tax on incomes of the last sub-division, or a minimum amount of $400,000 as annual tax.

Suggested Exemptions to Income Tax

1. In the case of unmarried persons, widows and widowers without dependent children, $1,000 per annum.
2. In the case of all other persons $3,000 per annum.
3. $300 for each of the following dependent relatives, viz.:—Mother, father, grandmother, grandfather, child, grandchild, sister or brother.
4. Income Tax paid to countries other than Canada, provided however, that all income derived from sources out

Cutting Down Overhead by Proper Precaution Against Preventable Fires

Fire Losses in the Province Caused by Carelessness—Simple Measures May Save the Labor and Thrift of Years—Better a Good Risk at a Low Rate Than a Poor Risk at a High Rate

CUTTING down overhead is a popular phrase heard in business circles to-day. It is no more popular than it deserves. The competitive period through which we are passing and are likely to experience for a number of years demands that efficiency govern every arm of the organization. Useless expense must be cut out. The little things must be looked after with scrupulous care. Every precaution must be taken to prevent waste or loss from preventable causes.

Losses by Fire

Fire is one of the most preventable and, at the same time, one of the most destructive factors in business to-day. The insurance rates you are paying to-day may be due to carelessness on your part or on the part of the merchant who is next door to you. Having bundles of waste paper around, instead of using a baling machine, allowing bits of excelsior or straw to blow from the rear of your store all over the street or exposing them to the lighted match or the butt of a cigar or cigarette carelessly thrown on the street, failing to have fire extinguishers or pails of water in convenient places in case of fire—these are contributing causes to high insurance rates and, too frequently, the immediate cause of a destructive and irreparable fire. No amount of money paid to you by an insurance company will repay the toil of years represented in the bricks and mortar of your store or in the merchandise that loads your shelves. Moreover, that merchandise that is destroyed by fire, those bricks and mortar that go down before the devastating flames, are a direct and irrecoverable loss on the community.

The Record of 1920

Practically 64 per cent., or two out of every three fires in Ontario last year were in dwellings, but the great losses incurred by fire occur in mercantile and industrial establishments. In other words, approximately 5 per cent. of the number of fires in mercantile and industrial establishments account for nearly one-half of the annual loss which, last year, was $11,771,718. In mercantile stores and warehouses last year nearly $2,000,000 worth of loss was caused by 1,003 fires, and of this loss nearly one-half million was not covered by insurance. So it will be seen that, in addition to the industrial loss caused by the interference to business, that is, the interruption of continuity in connection with the purchasing public by the loss of a store building which probably took a lifetime of saving and planning to build, the merchants of this Province sustained an actual loss last year of about $440,000, representing a loss not covered by insurance.

Revenue From Waste Paper

In every grocery store there is bound to be a vast accumulation of waste paper, excelsior, etc., coming with shipments of goods. In too many cases this debris is burned when, by a small investment, it might be turned into a revenue. To purchase a machine to bale this waste paper is not a heavy investment; and by such an investment, danger of destructive fire and a little revenue from the sale of this waste paper can be obtained. There is always the grave danger that someone may drop a match or throw a cigarette butt in the corner where this waste paper is kept, and then it does not take long for the labor of years to be wiped out completely. The great majority of fires in the Province are directly due to carelessness; your place of business may not be exempt from the careless person.

Modes of Prevention

While it is true that certain conditions may not be absolutely required as a result of the inspections of insurance companies, it is advisable in the interests of every merchant that he take what simple precautions he can to insure his own place against a destructive fire. The insurance company does not say that fire-fighting appliances such as chemical fire extinguishers, or pails of water containing from one-half to three-quarters of a pound of bicarbonate of soda to the gallon, be used. At the same time, they are advisable where quantities of inflammable merchandise are collected as in dry goods stores.

Rates of Insurance

The result of carelessness and neglect in failing to take the proper precautions is that insurance rates are higher than they should be. The insurance company is bound to protect itself on account of the increased hazard of risks, though this does not protect them from loss or from the danger of fire. The insurance company, moreover, would rather carry a good risk at a low rate than a poor risk at a high rate. It is altogether in your interests, therefore, to see that every precaution is taken to prevent a fire on your premises. More than that, by co-operation or by insistence, other places in the mercantile section of every town and city should be compelled to observe the elementary principles of prevention.

The Ontario Fire Prevention League has done and is doing a most useful work in educating the public, from the schools up, to take whatever steps are necessary to prevent the disastrous fires that occur from year to year and which wipe out much of the natural or created wealth of the Province.

Manufacturers, Importers to Apply Tax

Retailers Have Made no Objection to Present Sales Tax and Extension of This Means of Taxation Would Provide Revenue and Eliminate Dangers of Tax Collected by Retailer, Says R. Hawkins, Smiths Falls, Ont.

IN regard to the best solution of the taxation problem to raise the required revenues to take the place of the luxury, business profits tax and income taxes; I have given this subject some consideration during the past year, and from information available up to the present, I arrived at the conclusion that the most practicable and satisfactory way will be to ask the manufacturers and importers to add such percentage to their invoices as may be necessary to take the place of luxury, business profits and income taxes, and I venture the assertion that the objections to this method will be practically nil if fairly tried out. It removes from the public the irritation incidental to the collection, by retailers, of taxes direct from the consumers.

The manufacturers and jobbers have more complete records and systematic methods of accounting and can turn in to the Government, say monthly, the amount due. One transaction in this way would probably equal two thousand transactions, if carried on to the retailers, when we consider that one sale by a manufacturer would probably equal one hundred sales by retailers. There are probably twenty retailers to one manufacturer, so we can see the enormous amount of clerical work saved both to the Government and the business people by collecting this revenue at the source of production or importation.

No Objection to Sales Tax

I think few, if any, merchants objected to paying the two per cent. or more per cent. as the case may be on their invoices during the past year, a portion of this being absorbed by the merchants, particularly goods on which there is a fixed retail price, while on other lines this tax, with transportation charges, may be added to the cost price. This item would have to be increased to include the revenue tax passed on from manufacturers.

If done in this way, I submit that the desired revenue can be obtained expeditiously and efficiently at the minimum cost and with the least irritation and annoyance to the general public.

Defines "Manufacturer"

Another question arises in conjunction with this, viz.: "What constitutes a manufacturer?" I would suggest as a minimum standard for a manufacturer, something like the following: A manufacturer is one who operates a shop, factory or plant in which power other than hand power is utilized in the process of manufacture, wherein not less than four persons are employed for a period of not less than six months during the year.

Should a retailer or jobber be owner or part owner of a factory, as above, he or she shall be classed as a manufacturer in so far as his or her interest may appear in said factory.

I might enlarge on this question, giving more reasons and views from different angles, but have endeavored to condense the points aimed at. If I have succeeded in offering any hints that will be of service in the cause of war revenue tax, I will be pleased at having done so.

Is Selling Direct Plan A Success?

Method of Procter and Gamble Claimed to be a Failure But the Company Say Not—An Interesting Discussion

THE Procter and Gamble Co., with head offices in Cincinnati, Ohio, some months ago decided to sell direct to the retail trade in the United States and thus eliminate the wholesaler in the distribution of their products. At various times since there have been discussions among the trade as to how the change has worked out.

L. H. Haney, director of Business Research for the University of New York, recently announced that the plan has failed for the following reasons:

1. The P. & G. Co. is now quietly trying to sell its goods through certain wholesalers.
2. The company is not able to enforce its ten-day credit rule against retailers.
3. The company is accepting concessions on its "quantity deals."
4. The company is unable to force retailers to handle a full line of P. & G. products, one or two brands of soap being all they want.

What the Company Say

H. G. French, vice-president of the Procter & Gamble Co., in giving the company's side of the question, issued the following statement:

"Upon reading the article by Prof. L. H. Haney, we feel that we are warranted in making a statement at this time of the actual conditions as we find them.

"It is not our wish to enter into a discussion with Professor Haney, nor to criticize his opinion, but merely to give a statement of actual conditions as they are today for the benefit of those who are genuinely interested. We do not argue as to the wisdom or soundness of direct selling on the part of the soap industry—we merely state that so far as this company is concerned, we feel that the measure of its success is in two factors:

"First.—The number of dealers throughout the country who are selling our product to the consumer.

"Second.—The volume of sales.

"As to the first factor, we have not lost distribution as the result of the move; there has been a definite, though not a large gain in the distribution of our prominent brands, and there has been a slight loss in the distribution of our less prominent brands; we think this is true of all less prominent brands in the country; in any event, we feel that we can state positively that the change in our selling policy has not resulted in decreased distribution of our products, nor in a lessened number of dealers from whom the consumer may buy.

"As to the second factor, volume, a comparison by weeks of our soap business since January 1st of this year with the average week for the year ended June 30, 1920, that is, the year prior to the date upon which we made our change, indicates a larger volume, with almost a uniformly steady increase each week. In short, so far as our soap business is concerned, we can say without hesitation that its volume and growth are quite satisfactory.

"The vegetable cooking fat situation since January 1st has been disturbed as the result of the extraordinarily low price of lard, taken in conjunction with a consistently declining market on all cooking fats. The volume of our cooking fat business has been below normal, but we attribute this entirely to general conditions, and not in the slightest to our change in selling plan.

"We have established ourselves with the retail trade during the eight months of our experience in a way which is most satisfactory to us. As nearly as we can estimate it we have on our books the

What Became of the Difference?

Margins, Costs and Profits Are Discussed—A Merchant Figured a "Mark-up" of 30 Per Cent., With Expenses of 15 Per Cent., But His Percentage on Sales Was Only a Little Better Than 3 1-3%.

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

HERE is the kind of problem men are facing now—facing it because they have to. That is, it has been there all along, but in flush, easy-going times they do not realize it, because enough net earnings are left to blind them to the facts.

A merchant's sales were approximately $60,000 in 1920. He figured a mark-up of "around" 30 per cent. on all merchandise, including groceries, dry goods and hardware. His expenses figured "about" 15 per cent.; but instead of making 15 per cent. net as he had expected, he actually made only "about" $2,000, or a little better than 3 1/3 per cent. on sales. Question: what became of the difference?

Pondering over these facts as men do when they are faced by results so meagre compared with expectations, he now realizes that part of the deficit was due to inventory depreciation, and a very substantial additional amount to the fact that he fell into the old trap of figuring his mark-up on cost while, of course and naturally, his expenses and whatever net he realizes must be spread on the sales.

This does not entirely explain his discrepancy, so now he is "wondering" whether the rest of it is not accounted for by the fact that his big tonnage staples, sugar, flour, butter, eggs, feed and similar items which bear a gross burden of 10 per cent. or less represented a larger proportion of his volume than he had realized, and that this is what reduced the effect of his apparently liberal mark-up.

Deadly Deception of "Mark-Up"

Well, there is one good and hopeful feature about the way this man is thinking. That is the fact that he has started to think. He is also thinking mighty seriously. My impression is that he is due now to learn a few fundamentals; and once he has those down fine, he is certain not again to fall into these common and persistent errors. How is it that men have such difficulty in realizing that a mark-up is not equivalent to a mark-down of the same apparent size? Margins are always mark-downs, in that they are always a portion of the sales. This is true inevitably of expenses, also—in the final outcome—there is no other way. Then if a man will make the simple experiment of adding 10 per cent. to one hundred and then deducting 10 per cent. from the total thus obtained, he will demonstrate to himself that deception and loss lurk in loose figuring.

In this man's case, even supposing he could figure a uniform mark-up of 30 per cent. over his entire stock—which, of course, he cannot—he would have, not the $18,000 gross on his $60,000 sales that he expected to have, but $13,800—a little difference of $4,200; for thirty per cent. on cost is equivalent to only a trifle over 23 per cent. on sales, and the adverse variation is thus just under seven per cent.

The idea of "mark-up" is dangerous unless a man first arrives at a realization of what mark-up is actually equivalent to the mark-down of each margin. He must learn that 25 on cost is 20 on sales—difference, five per cent.; 33 1-3 on cost is 25 on sales—difference, 8 1-3 per cent.; 40 on cost is 28 on sales—difference, twelve per cent.; 43 on cost is 30 on sales—difference, thirteen per cent.; 50 on cost is 33 1-3 on sales—difference, sixteen and two-thirds per cent.

Knowledge of Details Essential

There is ground for happiness in the fact that this man has taken his depreciation and faced the facts of new values. I congratulate him on that! Men everywhere lost money in untold volume last fall because they did not have the good business sense to face the new levels of values, mark goods accordingly, thus make sales and be on the new level with new stocks at once. Many stocks today are lying just where they were last August, without a single turnover. Business men have tried to beat the inevitable. So that part of this merchant's affairs is sound.

Now he must face certain other essential facts: for example, that in the grocery line, twenty per cent. or over of his sales consist of sugar, and of the other great staples indicated above sufficient more to make up nearly fifty per cent. of his total sales of groceries. Those great staples will not move under margins in excess of ten, and butter, eggs, lard and many other items will bear only six or seven per cent. gross.

But it does not follow that these goods are sold "at a loss," as grocers commonly say and think. It does not cost anything like ten per cent. to handle sugar or flour or feed, unless, in the last case, the turnover is very slow and it is sold in small quantities. For details on all this, see my recent analysis of sugar. That will tell the fundamentals.

It is not possible to get thirty per cent. on nails, nor twenty per cent.; yet nails, because of their staple character and rapid turnover, are profitable on a margin 'way below the average hardware expense of, say, nineteen and a half expense.

Therefore, it follows, and this man knows it, though he seems to have forgotten it for the moment, that many goods must bear a margin far in excess of thirty per cent. Moreover, it will be found that among the thirty per cent. and over merchandise is to be found our real trouble. The "boarders" and "shelf-warmers" are up among the goods we have commonly regarded as the most profitable. Our real friends are the staples and semi-staples. So the right idea is to load the slow-turning luxuries and semi-luxuries as heavily as possible, to offset the staples and make the slow turners pay their keep.

I have purposely put quotation marks on the "about" and "around" because those show loose habits of thought; and you must have exact thoughts on all business problems and conclusions, or you will not succeed as you should.

Other Questions for the Future

He asks: "Would we be better off to discontinue selling grain on ten per cent. if it costs no more to warehouse and no more for clerk hire, but slightly more for delivery?" and

"Do we gain or lose by allowing hotels and restaurants five per cent. discount, including butter, eggs and sugar? As it costs no more for clerks or fixed expense, suppose we sell a hotel $200 per month and make, say, $2 net profit, should we figure that $2 so much velvet?"

Such questions involve a lot of local conditions with which I cannot be familiar. For instance, it might result in the loss of a large proportion of very profitable trade to quit delivering grain, and ten per cent. may not cover the actual burden all the way through. The one way is to check it out car by car, figuring correct rental, depreciation, all direct burdens of so many hours at so much cost per hour—plus profit on his time—of the clerk. You may find that you need more than ten per cent., but it does not then follow necessarily that you must get twenty or even fifteen per cent. Maybe what you need is eleven or twelve per cent.

It may be laid down as a rule that it is bad business to handle anything

A MERCHANT'S sales were approximately sixty thousand dollars last year. He figured a mark-up of "around" 30 per cent. on all merchandise. His expenses figured about 15 per cent., but instead of making 15 per cent. net as he had expected, he actually made only about two thousand dollars, or a little better than 3 1-3 per cent. on sales.

In an interesting article in this issue, the question is asked what became of the difference? The fact that such a small proportion of the total turnover was his, is partly accounted for in the fact that this merchant like too many others is figuring his mark-up on cost while, of course, and naturally, his expenses and whatever net he realizes must be spread on the sales.

Canadian Grocer is from time to time endeavoring to impress the retailer that he must not figure his profits on the cost, but always on the selling price. More than ever before must the merchant be careful to do so at the present time. With competition so very keen and every dealer exerting his utmost selling ability to maintain his trade at favorable levels, it behooves him to watch more closely this important problem, if he is to be profitably rewarded for his work. The easy-going methods of more prosperous days will not suffice in these times, and one way to avoid disappointment in respect to net earnings is to watch costs, and at the same time to realize that it is in estimating on the selling price of goods that the merchant reaches an accurate account of his actual profit.

BREAD SHOULD BE WRAPPED

AN important question that equally concerns the retail trade and the consumer, is the matter of wrapping bread at the factory or bakeshop. The need of this is obvious when one takes notice of the unclean method of handling bread while being distributed throughout the city. Unwrapped bread is delivered from wagons that are on the streets for a whole day, with dust laden with germs flying, and that often find a resting-place on the staff of life. The number of times that the bread is handled, often by none too clean hands of the drivers and by householders when a basket of bread is carried into the house for a selection, is generally admitted. Surely this condition can easily be remedied by a simple law passed by the Legislature compelling bakers to wrap all bread at the factory.

There is another side from which the retail merchant should view this question. It is the economic side. Merchants complain that the margin of profit allowed by the bakers is too small considering the high cost of paper, twine and labor. Some bakers argue that if they are compelled to wrap the bread the cost to the consumer will be increased, but they seem to overlook the fact that the retail merchant before he hands out the bread must wrap it. There is no doubt that machine wrapped bread is a cheaper process than by hand.

In another column of this issue there appears a coupon and Canadian Grocer cannot too strongly urge all readers to clip it out and return it that we may get the views of merchants from all over the Dominion on this subject.

EDITORIALS IN BRIEF FORM

THE retailer who carries a satisfactory and adequate stock and then advertises is seeing to it that he gets credit for his own enterprise.

THERE is plenty of business lying around loose to-day. The point is to get it. There is no royal road to this goal. It is just a question of going after it.

NOT infrequently the grocer who is in business for himself does not set aside a definite salary for himself. This is a poor policy. Every business man should set a value on his own work.

CARRY a complete range of stock. It is dangerous to overstock, but the retailer who has not on his shelves what his customers ask for is sure to lose out in the long run.

LET the grocer work with his assistants and the latter will work with him. With such a spirit prevalent in the store the assistants will give better service than they would if they just "worked for" the boss.

ABOUT the silliest thing a grocer can do is to cut down his margin of profit, simply because he sees green every time he looks across the street at his competitor. When you can't beat him to the price, beat him to the quality and the service. Why monkey with your margins if they are fair?

CURRIE, Souris East, P.E.I., writes suggesting that this year Canadians spend their vacations in Canada in order to not only become better acquainted with our country, but that as much money as possible will remain here. Mr. Currie has the right idea. Some of us know too little about our own country and we should endeavor to widen our knowledge about it as much as possible.

The Retailer Is Now A Factor That Must Be Reckoned With

"Business as Usual" Held Up as a Slogan at Second Annual Meeting of Retail Merchants' Association of Charlottetown, P.E.I.—Officers Elected

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., April 25.—The second annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association of this city proved to be a very successful affair. It took the form of a combined banquet and business meeting and was not only well attended but proved in all ways to be most interesting and successful.

The president, S. A. Macdonald, in presenting his annual report, referred to the successful efforts of the Retail Merchants' Association in having the luxury tax repealed. He also strongly denounced Government interference in business.

Misleading Reports Sent Out

"Some selfish interests in Canada," he said, "have made a business of sending press despatches broadcast throughout the land portraying conditions that do not exist and, as a consequence, have been misleading the public. From information received throughout the province, conditions are such as to cause no alarm, and would seem to justify us in adopting that well-known slogan, 'Business as usual'."

He then referred to the activities of the board during the year with regard to improved fire alarm system, daylight saving, summer half holiday, grant to Exhibition Association, etc. It was his privilege September last to attend the annual convention of the Retail Merchants' Association of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, held in Kentville, N.S. They had problems to solve there such as early closing, etc., matters mastered in Charlottetown long ago, he said. He was surprised to note that in the little town of Shubenacadie, N.S., all the retail stores open for business at half-past six in the morning.

Need of Closer Co-operation

Comments on existing conditions in trade were made in addresses by John McLeod and James Robertson.

J. C. Doyle, the general secretary for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, reviewed at the outset of his speech the activities of the Dominion Board during the year. In this connection he read extracts from the address of President Banfield at the Dominion Convention of the Retail Merchants' Association held at Vancouver, and also extracts from the Dominion secretary's report. The need of closer co-operation between all classes of retail merchants in Canada was among the matters dealt with.

Mr. Doyle read a long list of various measures which the association was instrumental in passing. These included the Bankruptcy Act; amendments to False Advertising Act; fixing Thanksgiving Day November 11; Fire Insurance Act; amendments to Adulteration Act; war stamps on patent medicines; prohibiting the sale of goods on Government property, etc.

Passing of the Luxury Tax

One of the greatest boons to the business of the country was brought about by the Retail Merchants' Association; this was the removal of the Luxury Tax. Mr. Doyle also referred to the Welfare Fund of $50,000 which is to be established.

After remarks along other lines Mr. Doyle emphasized the fact that manufacturers, the Government and wholesalers are beginning to realize the strength of the retailers, and to find that they are a factor to be reckoned with.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected:

President—J. P. Gordon.
Vice-president—B. W. LePage.
Secretary—W. A. Stewart.
Treasurer—Sixtus McLellan.

SOLICITING MERCHANTS FOR PRIZES BECOMES NUISANCE

One of the reasons for keeping up th retail price of goods in Ottawa an elsewhere has been brought to light i a statement issued by J. C. Campbell district secretary of the Retail Mer chants' Association of Canada. This i the solicitation of prizes for variou events held under the auspices of club and associations, which has attained suc proportions that many merchants ar obliged to count it as a problem.

Mr. Campbell states that this custo is rapidly becoming a nuisance, an cites one merchant in the city havin been called on to contribute to seve canvassers in one day. He also state that during the war retail merchant contributed thousands of dollars to wa causes, and then it was necessary to s cure a permit from a Government offi cial before a solicitor could canvas There is no such provision now, and th solicitors are increasing instead of d minishing.

PLAN CENTRAL BODY

Believing that interchange of con munity ideas between merchants an customers will materially assist in buil ing up business and develop the distric the Bloor and Bathurst Streets Busine Men's Association, of Toronto, Ont., r cently held the first of a series of mi night frolics in Allen's Bloor Street Th atre. Half Holiday Once a Week Can Be Now Compulsory

THE officers of the Manitoba Board of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, Inc., have secured legislation amending the Shops' Regulation Act, as follows:

1. The Shops' Regulation Act, being chapter 180 of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, 1913, is hereby amended by inserting next after section 3 the following sections:

3A—The municipal council of any rural municipality, incorporated village or town may by bylaw require that all or any class or classes of shops within the municipality shall be closed and remain closed on Thursday of every week between the hours of 12 o'clock noon and 6 o'clock in the afternoon during the whole or any part of the year.

3B—The council of any incorporated city may by bylaw require that all or any class or classes of shops within the city shall be closed and remain closed between the hours of 12 o'clock noon and 6 o'clock in the afternoon on such day or days of every week as the council may determine, during the whole or any part of the year.

2. This Act shall come into force on March 27th.

side of Canada must be included with income derived within Canada when computing the total income of the taxpayer for the purpose of this tax. Provided further that in any event the taxpayer's income tax shall not be less than if computed on income derived from Canadian sources alone.

Business Profits Tax

To this tax as administered up to the present there are the following serious objections:—

(a) It encourages extravagance in business methods.

(b) It seriously discourages enterprise and initiative.

(c) It particularly militates against the young man by taxing energy, effort and efficiency.

(d) It discourages new enterprises because the man with small capital or the man who requires to borrow receives a very small return for his risk and work, while the man with sufficient capital is loath to venture it, because in times of prosperity the Government shares largely in the profits of such ventures but is not prepared to assume its proportion of the losses in times of depression.

(e) Such tax may have serious and dangerous results to the taxpayer because of his inability in times of depression such as the present—where stocks in trade have greatly depreciated in value and are in some cases a drug on the market—to realize sufficient cash therefrom with which to pay said tax and at the same time meet his current obligations.

Should Not Be Re-enacted

The Board firmly believes for the above and other reasons that a business profits tax in any form is detrimental to the best interests of Canada, and that the business profits tax should not be re-enacted.

The Board is of the opinion that if the recommendations herein submitted are adopted by the Government, a much larger sum will be collected with much less friction than by the present methods, that there will be less attempted evasion of the taxes because of their fairness and the ease with which the amount of the various taxes may be determined, and that as a result capital will flow into business channels.

The Board is further of the opinion that the forms of taxation herein suggested should be known as "war taxes" and that the revenue derived therefrom should be applied as follows:

(a) In payment of interest on Canada's war debt and of war pensions.

(b) In reduction of the principal of Canada's war debt.

Organization is the One Safeguard

President of the Vancouver Branch of the Retail Merchants' Association Talks to the Grocers About Organization—Only Way to Improve Trade Conditions

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, April 25.—J. T. Crowder, president of the Vancouver branch, Retail Merchants' Association, spoke to the retail grocers at a luncheon during the recent retail grocers' convention on the subject, "Your Troubles Are Ours." Mr. Crowder has given a great deal of attention to retail merchandising conditions on the Pacific coast, and although a druggist himself speaks with authority on grocery affairs as well.

Association Necessary

"Until the grocers come into an association 100 per cent. there is a very slim chance of their improving their trade conditions," said Mr. Crowder.

"The doctors, the dentists, the plumbers, the engineers, the electricians have all reached the stage of association work when they can legislate for their profession or trade. For many years the doctors have maintained such a strong organization that the 'weak-sisters,' the quacks, and charlatans have been eliminated from their ranks. So strong have they become, and so well have they safeguarded the health of the public, that any others attempting to set up as healers find that unless they can convince the medical profession that they have attained a high state of excellence in their profession and have proved the efficiency of their methods, they stand a very great chance of being restrained, by law, from practising.

"The plumbers, the steamfitters, the electricians all have a part in the regulations governing their work. The druggists recently provided a splendid example of successful association work tending to the protection of the association's members.

The Necessity

"Recently an old-established firm of druggists on Main Street, Vancouver, was forced to vacate owing to the building having been sold. The new owner of the building proved to be an Oriental. Members of the profession noticed that all the signs were left on the windows and over the door. The next move was that an Oriental was putting in a stock of patents, toilet articles, tooth brushes, etc., and was, apparently, figuring on 'carrying on' with as near an approach to a drug store as he could do without employing a qualified druggist.

"The move was anticipated, however, but the druggists, who drafted an amendment to the Pharmacy Act, sent a delegate over to Victoria, where parliament was in session and managed to have the necessary amendments incorporated in the act. Now that Oriental has had to take all the signs off the store. Chinese are in the grocery business in great numbers, but not in the drug business.

Act Is Comprehensive

"The new reading of the act is rather comprehensive:

> "'It shall be unlawful for any person to practise, or attempt to practise the profession of a chemist and druggist, or chemist, or druggist, or pharmacist, or apothecary, or dispensing chemist, or dispensing druggist, or pharmacy, or drug store, or drug dispensary, or drug department, or other words of like import, or any sign, title or advertisement implying or calculated to lead people to infer that the person using same is registered under this act in the province of British Columbia, without having . . . . certificate as licentiate of pharmacy, etc.'

"To give you an idea of the difference that such protection makes," said Mr. Crowder, "let me instance a case in one of our up-country towns:

"As was the case in the instance already given, the building in which white grocer and a white druggist wer conducting their business was sol The purchaser was Chinese. Now, th drug signs are all down, and the Chin man cannot carry on a business in an way calculated to resemble a drug bus ness but the old signs of the grocer a still up, and a Chinaman carries on th grocery business.

Qualifications of a Grocer

"What are the qualifications of a gr cer? What are they? At present th only qualification is the desire to be grocer immediately, and a small amou of cash or credit. In Vancouver anyon of any color, can find an empty sto pay $10 to the city of Vancouver, a he is a grocer.

"The better day will dawn for th grocery business, when the grocers a organized to the point of establishing standard by which those desirous of e tering the grocery business can judged by the authorities issuing t license to do so. When the grocers ha organized sufficiently, the license i spectors will grant grocers' licenses such as have proved according to stan ards set by the organized grocers the fitness to conduct a grocery business

New By-law In Vancouver Helps The Butcher Trade

Vancouver, B.C., April 26.—The butchers in Vancouver have had their trade safeguarded by a new by-law which came into force on March 21. The by-law is designed to protect him from the careless competitor. One of the features that the grocers have looked on with great favor is article 15, which reads:

"No sleeping quarters shall be or exist in any premises used as a butcher shop."

A great number of grocers would welcome such a by-law dealing with the grocery trade as it would eliminate the Chinese grocer and his unsanitary practice of sleeping in his shop.

One other item states:

"All refrigerator rooms shall be provided with handles on the inside, so that such refrigerator rooms can be opened from the inside."

The practical good sense in this provision will be well understood by an one who has ever been accidentally sh in the ice box.

Dr. Zera Strong, city veterinary su geon, is appointed meat inspector carry out the provisions of the by-la

C. Beasley, of Straffordville, Ont., disposed of his grocery business to Jo McQuiggan, who for the present conduct both stores.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

PRICES of refined sugar dropped 50 cents per hundred the early part of the week, which brings the price to the same basis as before the advance of four weeks ago. This reduction will hardly affect the trade as the majority of wholesalers have been selling at irregular prices and generally at the same level as before the last advance. The present reduction is the result of the lower and weak condition of the raw sugar market and also the fact that refined sugar in the United States has reached low levels. Raw sugars continue in a weak and unsettled condition and prices show a decline of one quarter cent below last week's quotations.

Cereals are in a weak position with lower prices named on rolled oats and cornmeal. Package oats and one brand of corn flakes are also quoted lower.

Supplies of shelled French walnuts both on spot and in primary markets are extremely small with prices again advanced during the week. Almonds are also in a strong position, and although prices on spot are unchanged, higher prices are inevitable as quotations are generally lower or close to replacement value. Brazils are weak and lower prices are in sight.

Teas and coffees continue to be strong with prices in primary markets advanced on all grades. Prunes are easier and lower, but other dried fruits are ruling fairly steady to firm.

Rices are in an unsettled condition and lower prices can be expected.

Butter and cheese are somewhat easier with prices slightly reduced, and as the production is likely to be heavy this season, the tendency is for an easy market for some time. Eggs are in an unsettled condition, principally owing to the export conditions not being any too bright, which, to some extent, is curtailing storage operations.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 27.—The grocery market for the most part is steady with a regular movement of supplies. The drop of 50 cents per bag on refined sugar has had the effect of cutting down the sale to some extent as dealers are slow to buy on a declining market. Raw sugar is easier in price this week. There is no change in molasses or corn syrups except on the fancy tinned molasses, some brands of which are advanced in price. There are a number of reductions in package goods. Toasted corn flakes are reduced by some of the local wholesalers but this is not an official drop in the price. There is very little change in the fruit or vegetable market except that there is a fair supply of pineapples and oranges are a little easier in price. New cabbage is lower but tomatoes are higher. The onion market is stronger this week with an advance in the price of red onions. Dried fruits are firm with higher prices expected on dried apples and raisins. Teas are unchanged locally but primary markets show more strength. The first Rangoon rice is expected in the course of a few weeks.

Cereal Prices Steady

Montreal.

CEREALS.—There is no change in the quotations made on cereals. Prices are steady following the declines recorded last week. The demand is only fair in view of the coming warmer season and wholesalers and retailers are cutting down their stocks so that all supplies will be kept moving.

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS.—There is no change in the prices quoted on dried fruits. The market is firm on all lines except prunes which have shown weak tendencies for some time. Dried apples are firming up in price and when present stocks are depleted it is expected that higher prices will be asked. Raisins are very firm and Smyrnas are scarce. Currants are a little firmer in the primary markets. The demand for all lines of dried fruits is good.

Walnuts Strong in Price

Montreal.

NUTS.—In spite of the shortage of walnuts reported by importers some dealers are still selling at the old prices which, it is stated, are below the cost of replacement. Spot stocks are very low on all lines of walnuts, except the California. Almonds and pecans are also low in supply and prices are firm. There is a good steady demand for nuts of all kinds. Shredded cocoanut has been reduced 3 cents per pound and is now quoted at 30 cents.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 27.—Refiners reduced their list price on sugars 50 cents per hundred but this will not materially affect the trade as wholesalers have been selling at the old rate since the advance of four weeks ago. One brand of corn flakes have declined, also large size package oats. Canned vegetables are fairly active but fruits are slow. Sockeye salmon is holding firm under a good demand but other grades are easy with a limited demand. Prunes are marked lower. Rices are in an unsettled condition and the tendencies are for further reductions. Shelled walnuts continue strong with prices advanced. Brazils are easy with lower prices in sight. Almonds are firm and likely to be higher. Teas and coffees are holding a strong position. Oranges are higher in a firm market. Pineapples are arriving freely and prices are lower. Barrel apples are practically cleaned up and any that have quality are commanding firm prices. New potatoes are easy and lower but other southern vegetables show little change. Potatoes and other Canadian vegetables show little change.

Canned Goods Moving

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS. — A good movement is noted on canned vegetables and prices are more on a stabilized basis. Canned fruits continue to be quoted at irregular prices and are slow sellers. Crossed fish sardines are offered at $19.50 per case. Some brands of sockeye salmon, ones, are offered at $5.50 per dozen and halves at $2.90.

SUGAR.—Refiners have reduced their ist price on sugars 50 cents per hun- red. This reduction, however, will ake no material difference to the retail rade as wholesalers did not advance rices in accordance with the last ad- ance of refiners' prices. The raw sugar narket continues in a weak condition nd nothing definite can be learned in egard to future prospects.

Stocks of Currants Low

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUIT—Latest reports in regard to the currant situation are that there is a short production. This and large purchases from the British market have diminished the actual stocks in Greece to almost sixteen thousand tons, an amount considered insufficient to take care of the world requirements until next September. The natural consequence of this state of affairs is a firm market with prices steadily advancing. Thus, while amalias quality was selling in Greece around nine hundred and seventy drachmas per thousand pounds, same has gone up to one thousand and seventy drachmas and while the outlook is not for a continuance of this advance to a very large extent still the chances for decline are practically obliterated. Latest information from New York regarding spot stocks of Patras currants are that they are practically cleaned up. Evaporated apples are reported scarce as conditions have changed suddenly and large quantities are being shipped to the Old Country. An advance in price is expected shortly. From present appearances the 1921 crop of evaporated loganberries will open at prices that should promote a ready distribution.

REAL ANALYSIS OF MARGINS, COSTS AND PROFITS

without direct profit being made on it. That rule can be applied practically anywhere and to any commodity. It is so sound and just that no man should disregard it except in peculiar circumstances; and he should never rest satisfied that his circumstances are of that peculiar character. He should continually seek the way to make each line bear its due share of burden and profit.

The hotel question is similar. Not to serve the hotels might lead to the loss of much valuable trade. It is a producer of good will to have the hotels and restaurants report you as their source of supply. But if you get down to one per cent. net earnings on sales, maybe you will find that a flat five per cent. is not a practicable discount for you to make. Why five? Why not three or four? Why not more on some things and less on others? It is one weakness of our "liberal-minded" western habits that we disregard "odd figures"; but the time of closer figuring is at hand. I suggest that you make very minute examination of these points and act with due regard to all the factors.

Sugar in Bags and Groceries in Case Lots

Another man asks me what the proper margin is on sugar in bag lots, and soap and "groceries" in original case lots.

Much the same reasoning applies here. Sugar is sold on a flat advance of 40 to 80 cents to-day, and that seems very liberal to me, for I always felt that 25 to 50 cents was liberal. If the jobber needs from five to ten per cent., at least, on such staples, why not you?

Take into account all factors — not merely some of them — and decide. But bear in mind the truth that the laborer is worthy of his hire, also that he has to get it from somewere. Thus, it is not sound economics for the purchaser of moderate quantities to pay for the distribution to large buyers. Each should pay, as accurately as possible, for the character of service required. I think this can be brought about in any store.

Foreign Enquiries For Canadian Foodstuffs

Manufacturers desiring names of foreign buyers as referred to below can secure them by writing Canadian Grocer, University Avenue, Toronto, and giving number of enquiry.

Cheese, Butter, Lard, Are All Displayed Under Glass

South Vancouver Grocer Allows No Foodstuffs to be Exposed and All Are Kept Clean and Wholesome—No Displays Are Set on the Floor

VANCOUVER, April 25 (Special)—The passer-by is always favorably impressed with the general appearance of Elliott's grocery store in South Vancouver. The window glass has always been spotless, the board walk in front always washed clean, and the windows dressed carefully, and frequently, with seasonable lines.

No Uncovered Displays

The interior of the store is just what one would expect to find, judging from the windows. A great deal of glass is used in the fixtures. The counters have glass fronted bins, the cheese is in a glass case, the butter and lard (in cartons) are in a glass fronted cabinet. Open boxes of fancy biscuits are covered with glass tops, and no food is displayed uncovered. Opposite to the serving counters are narrow panels of mirror, and after watching the women purchasers station themselves in front of these panels the thought occurred that the grocer might easily arrange that his customers should stand at the spot most convenient for the grocer by putting a panel mirror on the shelving where he wanted them.

No Displays on the Floor

No displays are set on the floor. According to Mr. Elliott, it is not sufficient to keep dogs and cats out of the store. It is well to have all displays so that the customer knows that all foods are above possible contamination. Benches are built to hold any displays made outside. Potatoes, onions, etc., standing outside are raised on boxes.

The representative of Canadian Grocer commented on the amount of glass in the store, and Mr. MacFarlane, who is associated with Mr. Elliott in the store, said, "You will notice also that all the glass is clean. All the glass is washed and polished regularly." It is a fact that every piece of glass in evidence fairly scintillates with cleanliness, and adds in no small meassure to the general appearance of the store.

Trade Largely Credit

Mr. Elliott stated that a great deal of credit business is done in his store, but as it is carefully watched, it is perfectly satisfactory. One of the well known account systems is used and all outgoing orders, at all times, are accompanied with the counter check showing the amount of the purchase and the amount of the account to date. Mr. Elliott says that the cut rate concerns have very little effect on his business. His prices are always fair, based on his cost, and the service that the Elliott grocery gives is fully appreciated by his clientele. "There were a few of our customers, of course, who tried the novelty of going down town and carrying home their purchases," remarked Mr. Elliott, "but they found that an occasional spectacular saving did not compensate them for the lack of service and personal interest which they had been used to in their neighborhood grocer. I think the popularity of the cash and carry business is on the decline."

Egg Marketing Act in Sask. Is Explained

PRINCE ALBERT, April 25.—The following statement has been issued by the co-operation and markets branch of the provincial department of agriculture:

"It has come to our attention that a few retail merchants have the impression that the Egg Marketing Act, in force last season, no longer exists, while others think it does not come into effect each year until June 1. For the benefit of parties holding either of these opinions, I would like to point out that this act is now in force and has been continuously.

"At the last session of the house an amendment was made to section 3, clause (1) which makes it read:

" 'Every person who receives eggs for sale on consignment from producers or purchases eggs from producers for sale at retail or wholesale shall candle all eggs offered to him, and no person shall buy for resale or sell eggs unfit for human food.

"Under the act of 1920 the wholesalers, jobbers and others who bought from re-

Elliott's grocery store in South Vancouver is a model of cleanliness. The arrangement of the windows is very neat.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 27.—The produce market shows more activity this week. One cause may be the opening of navigation and consequent call for export of dairy products. Supplies of hogs offered on the market are bigger, while the demand for meats has fallen off, leaving the pork market in a weak condition and lower prices are quoted on live hogs. The big demand for fresh butter has exceeded the supply and the market has firmed up to an advance of one cent per pound, carrying with it the price of the old make butter, which is also a little higher. The big demand for eggs for both storage and consumption has strengthened the market further and prices are one cent per dozen higher. The cheese market stands firm with a bigger call for supplies for export. There is a fair demand for smoked meats, and although the prices are unchanged there is an easier tone in sympathy with the easier market for live hogs. Lard is still in an unsettled condition and a further decline is recorded. Haddock is very scarce and what little fresh lake fish has arrived on the market has been quickly taken up to meet the demand for the Jewish Passover. Bigger supplies are expected in the near future.

Butter One Cent. Higher

Montreal.

BUTTER—With the appearance of fresh made butter on the market the demand for domestic trade has swung that way and with a temporary shortage in the supply the market strengthened up to an advance of one cent a pound. Prices on the old make have also advanced. It is expected, however, that with bigger supplies coming forward the prices will ease off again. There is little or no demand for dairy butter at the present time.

Further Advance in Eggs

Montreal.

EGGS—On account of a keen demand for eggs for storage the strength of the egg market has been more emphasized this week, with another advance in price of one cent per dozen. The receipts are large but the demand has been equally large both for domestic trade and for export. Packers express the opinion that the good production will continue but that with it there is a bigger consumption. Prices may rule easier but it is significant that buyers are purchasing now for storage.

FRESH FISH—Haddock is still very scarce but dealers have not advanced prices further during the week. Cod is in better supply. There is very little fresh lake fish on the market apart from what was bought up for the Jewish holidays. The demand for this has been so great that there is nothing left for the general trade. Larger supplies of lake fish are expected, however, during the next week.

Lower Prices on Hogs

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS—A weak feeling has prevailed during the past week in the hog market and prices show a further decline. Quotations are from 50 to 75 cents lower than previously quoted and $14 per cwt. is being paid for live hogs weighed off cars. This falling off in price is attributed to the big supplies that are offered and the smaller demand on account of the decreased consumption resulting from the warmer weather. Prices on cattle are unchanged and the market is steady.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 27.—Live hog values were again reduced during the week and packers are offering lower prices for the balance of this week. Dressed hogs by the carcass are lower and although pork cuts are unchanged at present, lower prices will be in effect by the end of the week. Heavy smoked hams are somewhat lower but smaller sizes, which are in greatest demand, are unchanged. Some cuts of bacon are reduced but there is an easier feeling in all cured meats with a likelihood of a reduction in prices all along the line. Cooked hams, which were in scant supply during the past two weeks on account of the strike at the abattoirs, are offered in better supply, and by the end of the week it is expected that the quantity will again be up to normal. Butter and cheese are slightly easier and a large production is expected this season. There is an uncertain feeling in the egg market as to future prices and some packers are not buying as heavily as other years for storage, claiming that present levels are too high, while there are others who are storing in large quantity. The general tendency is, however, towards lower prices for eggs on account of export conditions. Margarine is reduced in an easy market. Lard and shortening are unchanged but the market tends easy.

Butter Drops Slightly

Toronto.

BUTTER.—A slightly easier feeling is manifest in the butter market. The new make continues to arrive more freely and in consequence prices are somewhat lower. There is no heavy buying, however; dealers are only buying what they need for immediate requirements. No. 1 fresh made creamery is quoted at 57 to 60 cents per pound and second grades range from 44 to 53 cents per pound.

Toronto.

CHEESE.—The opening of the cheese boards throughout the country seems to indicate that production is on the increase but so far it has not been sufficient to cause any big recessions, although prices are down one cent to the retail trade. Indications point to a large make this season and the tendencies are for easier prices. Old cheese of quality is becoming fairly scarce and quotations are steady.

Opinions on Eggs Differ

Toronto.

EGGS.—The condition of the egg market is rather unsettled and there is a diversity of opinion in regard to the future. Some dealers are buying fairly heavy for storage purposes while there are others who are storing very few, claiming that the present prices are too high, and to place eggs in the coolers at the present levels is too great a gamble. Then again, the export business is none too bright, prices offered in England are lower than the cost of laying them down, figuring at the present price in Canada. The outlook in England is very uncertain and the feeling is against any advance in price, which should have some bearing on the situation in Canada. The United States, too, has a surplus of eggs which will tend to rather lower prices as large quantities of American eggs are imported every year and usually at a lower price than the Canadian product.

Hogs Move Lower

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS. — Lower prices on hogs were again in evidence at the Union Stock Yards during the week, and packers are again out to further reduce prices for this week. Dressed hogs by the carcase are also down and by the end of the week lower prices on all fresh pork cuts are expected. Beef and veal are somewhat higher since our last report but the first of this week found prices again easier. Dressed beef prices are one to four cents higher on the best quality, but there is considerable poor stuff arriving which is commanding low prices. Choice heifers were sold from $7 to $8, while the few veal calves for disposal were priced at $6 to $10. Trading on the sheep and lamb market was very slack due to lack of receipts.

EGG MARKETING ACT IN SASK.

tail merchants were relieved of responsibility, but under the act as it now exists they are equally responsible for the elimination of bad eggs. At the same time the responsibility on the part of retail merchants and others who buy direct from the farmer is in no way changed. In other words, there is now a chain of responsibility extending from the producer to the consumer which will eliminate bad eggs. Produce dealers, wholesalers, packing house companies and cold storage concerns handling eggs have all been advised by personal interview and letter as to how the new regulations affect them and what is required of them.

"The staff of inspectors required to enforce this act is being increased and now that all parties are acquainted with its requirements, we expect good results will be obtained. We have every assurance of co-operation from those who come under the act for the first time.

"The need for such legislation has been apparent for years, but has been brought more forcibly to our attention since the eggs from Saskatchewan have forced their way into a world market. The demand by the consumer is for a graded commodity that he can depend upon. This was found a few years ago in connection with the butter from Saskatchewan and it is equally true today of eggs. Many carloads of Saskatchewan eggs are marketed annually outside our province and country and in order to compete successfully with all factors on such markets the product must be of the best, and since it is the export value of eggs that sets the price to the producer, it can readily be seen any legislation that will improve the quality of eggs marketed will ultimately result in a better price to the producer.

"Looking at it from the standpoint of the producer it is obviously unfair that the man who markets fresh eggs and the one who markets bad eggs should receive the same price. This is the condition that has existed during the past. The fruit grower does not expect to market his rotten apples, neither should the man marketing bad eggs expect to sell them.

"From the viewpoint of the consumer it can be seen that the elimination of such a system which has paid alike for good and bad eggs will result in a better and more dependable produce without increasing the cost. In other words, the consumer will not pay for bad eggs."

Now as Never Before—

You Need Sound Financial Information

THERE never was a time when business merchants needed sound, sane, financial knowledge of commercial happenings on which to base present and future investments as they do right now.

For your business profits are not real profits until you have them safely invested in reliable securities.

Why not invest profits from your shop and the coupons from your Victory Bonds in genuine securities, news of which you will find every week in THE FINANCIAL POST Investors' Enquiry Service, a feature for subscribers which will give you the benefit of investigators in all the big financial centres? This service is just as if you paid a man $10,000 a year to be your own personal investigator in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg—in fact, every city in the Dominion.

But you cannot hire the services of this staff—you get them free with a subscription to THE FINANCIAL POST, through this splendid Investors' Enquiry Service, which is free to all readers.

But that is not the only thing—this commercial newspaper gives you the financial, industrial, banking news of the country in convenient readable form—just the data you need for your business—just the facts you need for your investments—in fact, a splendid partner of the ambitious merchant.

When 8,425 merchants, business executives, bankers, lawyers find in THE FINANCIAL POST the very facts which will help them in their business, will you not find a weekly reading of its pages very beneficial?

CURRANT STOCKS DWINDLE

Advices from A. Droulais Co., Patras, Greece, state that: "The spring demand for currants in England has now begun and is very brisk. Stocks are getting very short in Greece. The quantity of Gulf fruit available for America will probably not exceed 100 tons. Patras fruit is nearly exhausted, and Amalias and Provincials together do not amount to more than 20,000 tons.

DRIED PEACH PRICES LOWER

To meet eastern local competition, the California Peach and Fig Growers have established a new dried peach price list in conformity with these existing market conditions. The new list is approximately 33 1-3% less than the opening prices on the 1920 crop. Peaches are now on a bed rock basis, and according to Sales Manager A. J. Sturtevant, Jr., no further declines are anticipated.

Stocks of dried peaches are not large either on the coast or in eastern cities, but the market has been dull and dragging owing to price resistance on the part of the consumer. The reduction in price is expected to stimulate consumption and result in a cleanup of the 1920 crop before the new crop is ready for the market.

THE "WANT" AD.

The "want ad." has grown from a little used force in business life into one of the great necessities of the present day.

Business men nowadays turn to the "want ad." as a matter of course for a hundred small services.

The "want ad." gets work for workers and workers for work.

It gets clerks for employers and finds employers for clerks. It brings together buyer and seller, and enables them to do business though they may be thousands of miles apart.

The "want ad." is the great force in the small affairs and incidents of daily life.

For Less Service— A Lower Rate

Heretofore, when you asked the long distance operator to connect you with a distant telephone, even though you said to her, "Anyone at that number will do," you paid the same rate as if you had specified a particular person.

Now, a rate is in effect for this type of call ("Station-to-Station" service), which is lower than for calls where a particular person is wanted. The operating cost and use of circuits involved in handling a call for a particular person are much greater than for a message where the calling party will talk with anyone who answers the distant telephone.

It is a real economy, when placing long distance calls, to say whenever possible, "Anyone at that number will do."

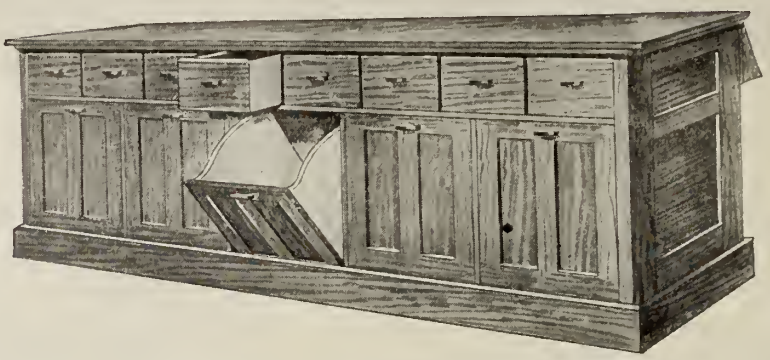
With Arnett Grocery Counter No. 300



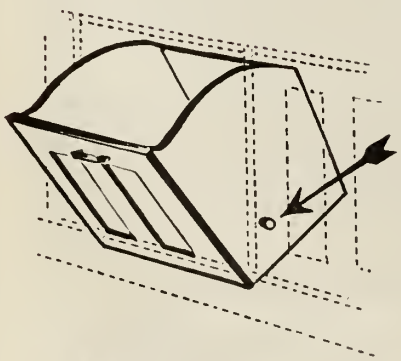
Every inch of space in this counter is fitted for use. The front trays are for display and do not interfere with the drawers at the back. The illustration below shows the excellent arrangement of drawers immediately below the counter, and below them the Arnett Tipping Bins separated from the drawers by dustproof partitions.

The Arnett Tipping Bins

The Arnett Tipping Bin is different from all other grocery tipping bins. It is not hinged at the bottom. Its weight rests on the scientific point of balance inside the bin compartment. This means that the Arnett Bin opens gently without strain, no matter what load is in it. It closes as smoothly as a well-made drawer.

We can supply Arnett Tipping Bins for wall case if desired as well as in the counter.

Arnett Tipping Bins cost no more than an ordinary tipping bin, but are twice as efficient.



This scientific balancing of the Arnett Tipping Bin makes your work easier, and means quicker service for your customers.

The Sales-Significance of Sunsweet

THREE dominant questions: Will it please and satisfy the public? Will it make a profit for you? Will it please and satisfy the trade? To each of which SUNSWEET answers, most emphatically, "Yes."

SUNSWEET Prunes are packed in all desirable sizes, but only one grade—the very best. It is easy to see that the trees in one orchard will produce a multiplicity of sizes. Therefore, we plan to educate the consumer-public to a better understanding of our gradings; and to show that our brand name SUNSWEET is a designation of quality—not size.

Tell The Truth About "Pinks"

Sail right in with the flag of Honesty and plain Truth at the mast head. Tell every one of your customers the plain facts about "Pink" Salmon. Their lack of high colour is more than made good by the fine flavour and close texture of flesh. Here is a perfect recipe for a lunch:

CREAMED SALMON No. 3

One of the below brands of Salmon; one cup milk; two level tablespoons flour; two level tablespoons butter; one teaspoonful chopped parsley; melt butter; add flour, rubbing together over blaze until flour begins to cook; add milk, stirring constantly; boil till smooth; add parsley and salmon; keep on stove till salmon heats through; serve on squares of buttered toast or in pastry cups.

Don't confuse "Chums" with "Pinks." There is a great difference, and there are few brands of Chums you can depend upon. Therefore Buy and Sell Cascade, Big Horn, Tip Top and Wellington Brands of Pinks.

Sells Forty Dozen Bottles of Ginger Ale in a Day

Western Ontario Firm Increases Sales of Ginger Ale by Displaying It in a Wire Basket, on a Table, Right Up in the Front of the Store

It is often surprising to a merchant what display of various articles, such as moving a jar of fancy biscuits to another position in the store, or placing a basket containing toilet soap in a conspicuous spot, will produce in the way of increased sales. For instance—the placing of a wire display basket containing a certain brand of ginger ale in a table well up to the front of the store has been the means of making ginger ale—hitherto considered to be only a summer line—an all the year 'round article in the store of ———. During the "flu" epidemic of the past winter this firm's sales of ginger ale were averaging twenty-five dozen bottles a day, and there rarely is a day passes without a sale of ginger ale throughout the entire year. But of course it is in the summer season that the greatest bulk is sold, and the average then reaches around 40 dozen bottles a day. "The real success in selling ginger ale at a profit," remarked Mr. ——— to CANADIAN GROCER, "is in getting back the empties or the equivalent in money. In the past we did not charge up the bottles, but depended on the customers, clerks and drivers to see that returns were made. This proved very unsatisfactory. With GURD'S brand we charge so much a dozen, including bottles, and the bottles are not returnable. This method of selling ginger ale, in my opinion, is the only method. When we sell a dozen, that ends the transaction, because there are no empties to collect and no credit, no disputes with customers, and, best of all, no empties to be cased up and returned to the factory."

This is just another story of how an aggressive merchant built up a profitable business on a certain line, that at one time was considered "just an accommodation to his customers."

The above article appeared in the Editorial Section of Canadian Grocer—May 28th issue—page 29. To repeat the experience, add to your stock

GURD'S DRY GINGER ALE

—the superb, refreshing and satisfying quality beverage that is known everywhere and preferred wherever known.

From Coast to Coast you will find Gurd's Ginger Ale in most every first-class grocery that caters to the better class of trade.

By a combination of window display, counter display, show cards, selling talk and Gurd's Dry Ginger Ale, every grocery can make this big summer selling a banner event in the history of their store.

In every community there are a certain few, and often a great many, to whom quality rather than price makes its strongest appeal.

For social functions, such as weddings, birthday celebrations, special anniversaries, and select social gatherings, Gurd's Dry Ginger Ale is a particularly welcome addition to the refreshment menu. We suggest its introduction to people who appreciate selectness.

We do a large shipping business across Canada from coast to coast and feel that we should include every ambitious Canadian grocer among our distributors. Place your orders in anticipation of the season's requirements. Write for price lists.

Sell a Different Tea

Haven't you often looked out of the store window with a feeling somewhat akin to dismay at the business the Tea Pedlar was picking up from door to door among your customers, and wondered how you were to beat him at his own game?

The orders he gets should belong to you, but you cannot get them by selling the same kind of tea he sells.

The bulk tea he sells looks the same, perhaps is the same, as your bulk tea. You must sell a different and a better tea, and do you know, one of the best teas in the world is right at your hand, RED ROSE package TEA? Aside from the quality of RED ROSE TEA, it is something the pedlar cannot handle because we will not sell to him.

A customer for RED ROSE TEA is worth much more to you than a customer for bulk tea. You are pretty sure to keep your Red Rose customer; the pedlar may take your bulk tea customer any day.

Worth thinking about, isn't it?

Talk to our traveller the next time he calls. We know you want to retain your tea trade. He may be able to offer you some other good suggestions.

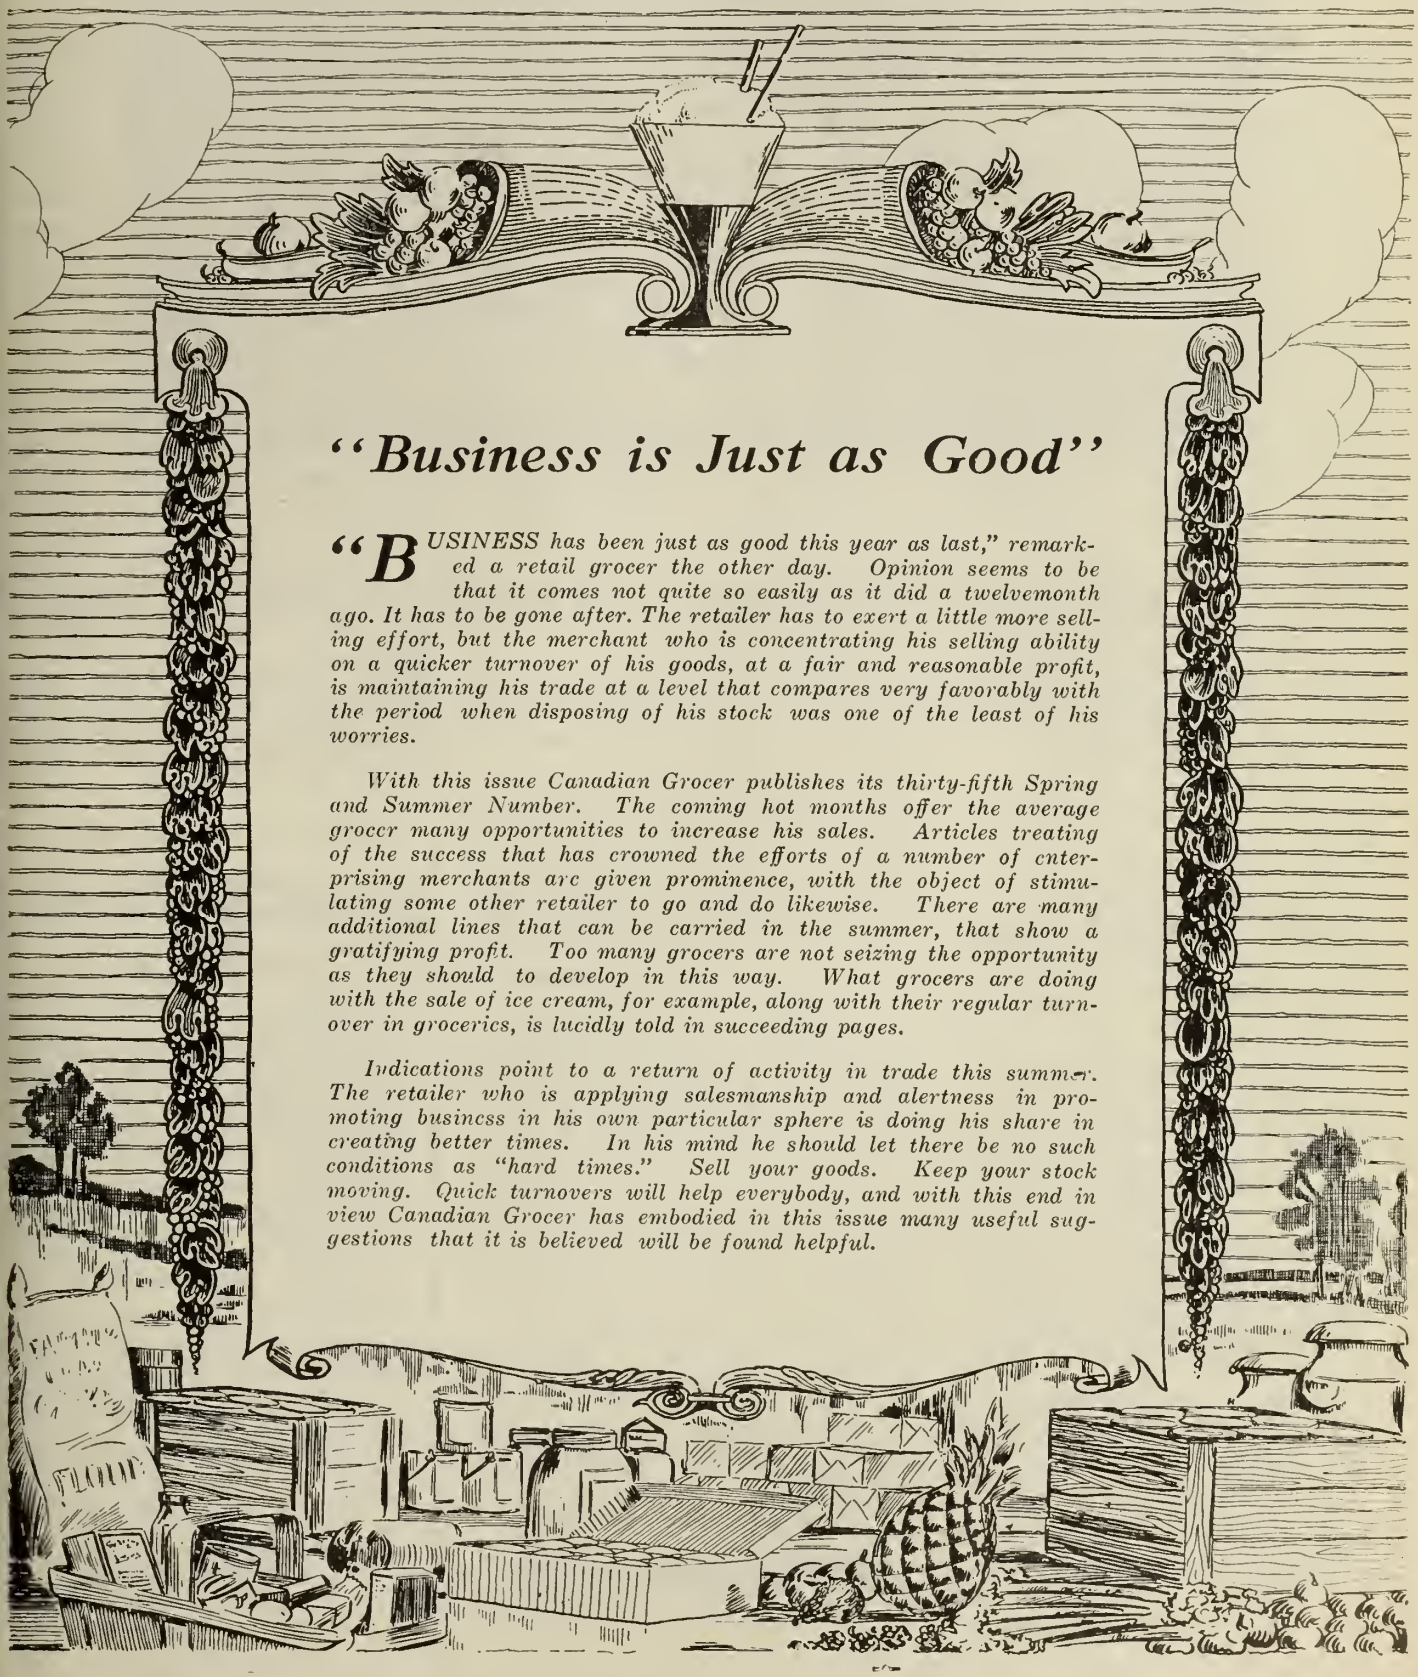
CANADIAN GROCER

VOL. XXXV. TORONTO, MAY 6, 1921 No. 18



"Business is Just as Good"

"BUSINESS has been just as good this year as last," remarked a retail grocer the other day. Opinion seems to be that it comes not quite so easily as it did a twelvemonth ago. It has to be gone after. The retailer has to exert a little more selling effort, but the merchant who is concentrating his selling ability on a quicker turnover of his goods, at a fair and reasonable profit, is maintaining his trade at a level that compares very favorably with the period when disposing of his stock was one of the least of his worries.

With this issue Canadian Grocer publishes its thirty-fifth Spring and Summer Number. The coming hot months offer the average grocer many opportunities to increase his sales. Articles treating of the success that has crowned the efforts of a number of enterprising merchants are given prominence, with the object of stimulating some other retailer to go and do likewise. There are many additional lines that can be carried in the summer, that show a gratifying profit. Too many grocers are not seizing the opportunity as they should to develop in this way. What grocers are doing with the sale of ice cream, for example, along with their regular turnover in grocerics, is lucidly told in succeeding pages.

Indications point to a return of activity in trade this summer. The retailer who is applying salesmanship and alertness in promoting business in his own particular sphere is doing his share in creating better times. In his mind he should let there be no such conditions as "hard times." Sell your goods. Keep your stock moving. Quick turnovers will help everybody, and with this end in view Canadian Grocer has embodied in this issue many useful suggestions that it is believed will be found helpful.

Adopts Unique Plan of Advertising

J. McTaggart & Sons, Vancouver, B.C., Believe in Keeping in Touch With Customers—Follow Up First Orders With Special Letter That Invariably Results in Permanent Customers—Increasing Sales of Apples by Letter to Business Men

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, B.C., April 29.—J. McTaggart & Sons, grocers in this city, put bright ideas into practice, and profit thereby. They do not sit by and wait for business to come to them, but use attractive window displays to advantage, following up the same with letters to different classes of patrons. Copies of these letters are here reproduced. "We have had great success with these letters," Mr. McTaggart told a representative of Canadian Grocer recently. "It is surprising how this personal appeal to people meant, in almost every instance, a sale. A letter to customers makes them feel you are taking a real interest in their buying, and indicates that you are anxious to give pleasure and satisfaction. We have a list of business men, and the idea occurred to me that if they had a box of apples in their offices they might eat more, and hence my letter to them. The idea appealed and we greatly increased our sales of these special boxes.

Follows Up First Orders

"In following up first orders, we have found that a letter to the woman often results in a new and permanent customer. In this way, we show that we are anxious to cater to their needs, and the person in question feeling that you are ready and willing to give them real service invariably wants to deal with us. Service is always appreciated and this little letter to prospective customers is just one of our ways of extending our trade. The majority of people like attention of this kind, and it spells profit to the merchants who give it."

Good Morning:

Would you eat a red apple daily, if a supply were laid down right at your desk, fresh from the orchard, at a reasonable price?

I believe you would—that's why I am making this proposition to you.

Apples are "heap big medicine" for an office worker like you.

We are packing our fruit with the utmost care. They will probably spoil your taste for ordinary fruit-stand apples, but that is your look-out.

The name is McTaggart's Grocery. The phone number is Seymour 2212. Order now and see how pleased you will be. We will send you 50 large, red, luscious B.C. apples packed in a special box.

P.S.—McTaggart specializes in B.C. fruit.

Dear Madam,

A few days ago you favored us with an order for some of the things we sell.

We are writing now to express the hope that you received them all right, and that you were entirely satisfied.

We do not consider a sale completed, when it leaves our store, the goods must be just as you want them or we are not satisfied.

We would be pleased to have you become one of our regular patrons, we will do our best to serve you well.

Thanking you for the business you have already given us, and hoping to be further favored.

Sincerely yours,
J. McTaggart & Sons.

A Reputation for Tea and Coffee

In the third letter here reproduced, this firm is directing the attention of the customer to their special tea and coffee. "We have greatly increased our sales of tea and coffee through this medium," Mr. McTaggart told Canadian Grocer. "Building a reputation for good coffee and tea is good business, and getting the people into your store to buy these two lines, it is invariably the case that an order for general groceries can be secured."

Removable Glass Covers

Another original and novel idea is shown in the accompanying photograph. Mr. McTaggart called in the services of a picture framer and had constructed removable glass covers for his biscuit tins. The use of these glass covers permits of the maximum display, but does away entirely with flies and dust. The background of the window features fancy fruit hampers. All bulk biscuits leaving the McTaggart store are packaged in specially prepared cartons which ensure freedom from breakage.

Started in Small Way

A little over thirty years ago J. McTaggart opened a small grocery store on Granville Street at what was then the extreme south end of Granville Street. Beyond his store could be seen a tangle of standing timber, ferns and creepers. Mr. McTaggart worked in the C.P.R. shops and his wife ran the store. To-day Granville Street extends six miles south to the Fraser River, and McTaggart's grocery has grown to a premier position among the retail stores of the west. Mr. McTaggart a little over a year ago moved off Granville Street one block west to the corner of Robson and Howe Streets.

Dear Madam:—

For several years past we have been specializing in the tea and coffee business and would like to take this opportunity of particularly drawing your attention to Deckajulie B.O.P. Tea.

We have found from past experience that those of our patrons who have started using this standard have got a great deal more satisfaction and pleasure out of their cup of tea.

Might we suggest that you include a pound in your next order? We shall be quite willing to stand behind it and refund the money if you are not entirely satisfied with our recommendation.

Have you noticed our window display?

Thanking you for your patronage.

Gasoline Outfit Increases Summer Trade

Quebec Province Grocer Sells Gasoline and Accessories to Tourists and Finds That it Brings Extra Business to the Grocery Store—Has Established Good Trade in Automobile Accessories as Well

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

LENNOXVILLE, Que. — One year ago W. Johnston opened a new grocery store in Lennoxville, Quebec. A picture of the store was published in Canadian Grocer together with an article in which it was stated that this grocer had installed a gasoline tank underground beside his store with an automatic measuring pump in front of the store. It was further explained in that article that since the store was on one of the main roads through the lower part of Quebec into the United States, this grocer developed a big sale of gasoline to passing motorists.

Brings Grocery Trade

This month a representative of Canadian Grocer called on Mr. Johnston again and learned that this trade had developed into something more than the sale of gasoline. Through the summer and fall months of last year he found that by selling gasoline to the motorists he was also getting a bigger share of the grocery trade. These tourists stop on their way through to replenish their supply of gasoline, and in most cases enter the store and buy food stuffs, particularly picnic lines and chocolates. Mr. Johnston attributes the increased sales in these lines during last summer and fall to the fact that he sold gasoline to the passing motorists.

Sells Automobile Accessories

This year he has taken one step further in this trade and has stocked a complete line of automobile accessories. Along one side of the store he has fitted wall cases and drawers for the display and accommodation of these lines. One of the front windows has also been allotted to the display of automobile accessories. On account of the early spring this year and consequent earlier opening of road traffic, he has already had the opportunity to test out the adaptability of this new line to the grocery trade.

A Permanent Department

Mr. Johnston's opinion is summed up in his own words: "I have found that since most of the farmers in this part of the country have their own cars and there are many cars in the town itself, besides all the tourists, it is an accommodation to the people. It brings extra business apart from the sale of the accessories themselves, and to me it has proved an interesting side-line. It is rather a diversion from the routine grocery business. It is an easy line to handle and adds to the attractiveness of the store when it is properly displayed. I feel confident that I will keep it as a department of my store, not that my interest in the grocery business is waning, but because I firmly believe that it has and will help to increase my grocery trade."

"Let Me Have Every Aid in Selling"

Jenkins & Son, Charlottetown, P.E.I., Believe That Good Service and Easy Handling of Merchandise is Only Possible With the Best Equipment—Turnover in This Store Last Year Was $300,000 —Equipment, System, and Salesmanship, Essentials That are Indispensable

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., May 2. —"If there is anything else on the market that will help me sell more goods or make more money, I would like to hear of it," stated Mr. Jenkins, of the firm of Jenkins & Son, Charlottetown, P.E.I., recently in an interview with Canadian Grocer.

In so saying Mr. Jenkins sums up in a few words his opinion of the value of store equipment and accessories in a retail store.

Along one side of the store is a wall case, the base of which is composed of a double row of pivoted bins about forty in number. The top part, however, instead of open shelves is enclosed with glass doors, keeping the stock in the best possible shape and at the same time easy of access for the salespeople. There are no counters or display tables in front of this wall case, and the pivoted bins having glass fronts allow the customers to examine freely the contents, thereby stimulating sales of those lines, and acting in the same capacity as a salesman.

Glass Front Counters

The other side of the store is also equipped with pivoted bins and shelving but, unlike the other side, there are counters with glass front compartments, wherein are displayed samples of different merchandise. These counters are also fitted beneath with bins, convenient to the salespeople, also showcases displaying confectionery and fruits. Mr. Jenkins lays great stress on the value of such equipment and considers "it absolutely necessary to enable them to give better service and at the same time handle more goods within a given time."

As regards accessories, the Jenkins store is pretty fully equipped. A cash register is conveniently located and contains an individual cash drawer for each clerk, thereby placing the full responsibility upon each salesman or saleswoman for all moneys handled by them. In connection with the cash register there is used an accounting system which has its advantages. A credit register, which Mr. Jenkins considers indispensable, enables the firm to keep close watch upon credit accounts, and collections are made promptly. Other accessories that are installed, each having its own particular value, permitting the firm to do more work in less time and handle more goods at less cost, include electric coffee mill, automatic scales, adding machine, stenograph, typewriter and system desk.

JENKINISMS

Do not make price cutting a policy of the business.

Buy in quantities that will not make it necessary to slash prices in order to get rid of the goods.

Give service to customers and stand behind the goods.

Have delivery run on regular schedule.

Don't let insistent customers tempt one into making special deliveries.

Train customers into getting orders in on time to catch regular deliveries.

Don't hold delivery team one minute beyond scheduled time to leave the store.

Pay special attention to window displays so that each display will bring direct results.

1920 Turnover $300,000

During 1920 Jenkins & Son had a turnover of $300,000. This large turnover was attributed to equipment, systematic management and salesmanship, three essentials that are indispensable in building a business.

The staff is composed of six salespeople, two office girls, two warehouse men, one man for weighing up goods and three delivery men. The man for weighing goods is kept constantly busy weighing bulk goods, such as sugar, flour, meals, spices, coffee, etc. In fact everything that is possible is weighed up in packages and kept within easy reach of the salespeople. This weighing is all done in a separate department, which leaves the store free from such work and permits it to be used pretty much as a salesroom and display room only.

Delivery Works on Schedule

The delivery system is one upon which Jenkins & Son place great value, but there are rules that are rigidly adhered to. "Deliveries run on a regular schedule, and under no circumstances can customers tempt us to make a special delivery," said Mr. Jenkins. "In this regard we are very strict and we educate our customers to get their orders in on time to catch regular deliveries. We will not hold a delivery team one minute beyond scheduled time for leaving the store. Strict adherence to this rule is the only way to keep delivery men, and good delivery men constitute the biggest element in satisfactory delivery service."

By the way we might mention that the chief of the delivery service has a unique record of having driven a Jenkins wagon for the past twenty-three years, and during all that time he has never lost a day and has never been the subject for a complaint from a customer, truly a remarkable record, which speaks well of the man and of the organization by whom he is employed.

Must Supply Receptacles

Another feature in the Jenkins store is that customers requiring vinegar or other liquid goods in bulk must supply their own receptacle. At one time the firm supplied these, but they found that usually they were never returned and a good many dollars were lost. Likewise they have desisted from the habit of giving away packing cases used as delivery boxes. While these boxes frequently have to be left with customers, they are discouraged from keeping them, owing to the fact that each box is painted red and has the Jenkins name stencilled on it.

Value of Window Displays

Great care and attention are devoted to the window displays, changing them often and putting in attractive displays of seasonable goods. During the fruit season particular care is taken, and it has been no trick to sell 6,000 oranges on

Eliminates Night Work on Books

Manager of Grocery Store in Orangeville, Ont., Considers the Credit Register an Investment That Pays Big Returns—Customers Now Pay Often

"I CONSIDER the —— credit register the most valuable piece of furniture in the store," stated P. Harding, manager of R. H. Robinson, retail grocer, Orangeville, Ont., to a Canadian Grocer representative. "It easily saves ten hours' work each week." Before installing the register, it was necessary for Mr. Robinson to come back to the store three nights every week to make up the books, and even working overtime each week the accounts were not always in shape when customers came in to pay their bills. The result was that customers often came in for their account and when it was not ready they took it as an excuse for not paying, stating that they would call again. "Very often," he added, "they would not call back as soon as they should, and we would just have to wait until they are ready to pay.

Customers Pay Oftener

"Now that is all changed. The accounts are always ready and customers are paying more often, not allowing their accounts to grow nearly as large. Every time they give an order or purchase a single article, they can see at a glance just how much they owe and when it gets to a certain amount they commence to think it is about time to pay it."

In conducting a credit business one of the most annoying things that a merchant has to contend with is the complaints of customers about some item that they had not remembered purchasing. Some people also have a habit of continually making the statement, "I did not think the account was nearly so large and I am afraid that I will not be able to pay the full amount this time." In this respect the experience of R. H. Robinson has been no different from other merchants and often complaints from customers would come in about accounts not being ready or that the account was larger than they expected. Since installing the credit register, however, this has been all eliminated.

A Statement With Every Order

"We have no disputes whatever now," he remarked, "about accounts being too large or that some article was not purchased. Every time an article is bought, the previous amount is carried forward on to the new bill, and in that way a complete statement of the account is rendered with every purchase."

It was just at the noon hour when Canadian Grocer representative was in the store, and a busy hour it was with customers coming in for last minute articles to take home for the noon meal. A man on his return from dinner dropped in for some tobacco and matches. After being served, he told the salesman that he would drop in later and pay for them. "I am just going back to work and forgot to put some money in my pocket," he stated. This was apparently all right, as he was known to the store and the salesman charged the purchase in the proper form.

Where Register Is Valuable

"Did you notice that?" said Mr. Harding to Canadian Grocer. "That is where the credit register will be most valuable. That man has not a regular account, but his wife comes in quite often, so the next time she comes, we will just turn up that sale and add it to the purchase she makes. No doubt there will be some explanation, but the most important thing is we will get the money."

"We Believe in Pushing Special Lines all the Time—People are Waiting for Suggestions"

McDonald and Forman, Grocers in Brandon, Man., Believe in Adopting Alert Selling Methods in Their Business—Sell Only Top Quality Merchandise, and Sales in the Last Year Established Record Figures—Quality is More Important Than Price

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

"WE have found the display of special lines, together with little talks to customers and advertising in the daily press, of very great assistance in the way of increasing sales," J. F. McDonald, of McDonald & Forman, Brandon, Man., told Canadian Grocer recently. "We have never been able to make headway with inferior goods, however, and so we always carry only the best that can be obtained. After all, quality is of first importance, and if a merchant is catering to a public that demands quality before all else, the question of price is not going to stand in the way of sales."

Sales Reach Record Figures

McDonald and Forman have been in business for the past nine years in Brandon. J. F. McDonald and J. F. Forman, before entering business on their own behalf, were employed as clerks, and worked together in the grocery trade. By the application of enterprising ideas, diligence, and service, they have secured a splendid class of patronage. Last year their sales reached record figures eclipsing all previous years in the matter of turnover. By exerting every selling effort, even in these days of readjustment, they are maintaining sales at a very favorable level. McDonald and Forman are salesmen, and sell all the time. It is not their plan to merely take orders, but always their endeavor to sell something in addition to the articles specially asked for. "We believe in pushing some particular line all the time," Mr. McDonald stated. "It is surprising the number of customers who will buy other goods if only the suggestion is made to them.

Change Displays Frequently

"We change our window displays constantly, twice and often three times in the week. Interior and counter displays are also of material aid in the way of increasing the sale of some special line. If a merchant is himself convinced of the worth of an article, and can with confidence recommend it to his customers, he will have no difficulty in selling it to his clientele. The average customer counts on her grocer's recommendation when buying an article for the first time. A good plan is to try the line out in your own home first, and if satisfied, you have no hesitancy in pushing its sale."

McDonald and Forman are consistent advertisers in the Brandon papers, and have long since been convinced of the value of keeping their announcement before the public. Their advertising is always linked up with their window displays, and thus are the very best results obtained.

Interior Display Sells

The McDonald and Forman grocery is so arranged as to make for the best displays. Silent salesmen for the showing of choice confectionery are so situated as to immediately catch the eye of the customer on entering the store, and also to obtain a maximum of light. "This McDonald and Forman, Brandon, Man., in addition to using window displays at all times to aid selling, believe in attractive counter and interior displays.

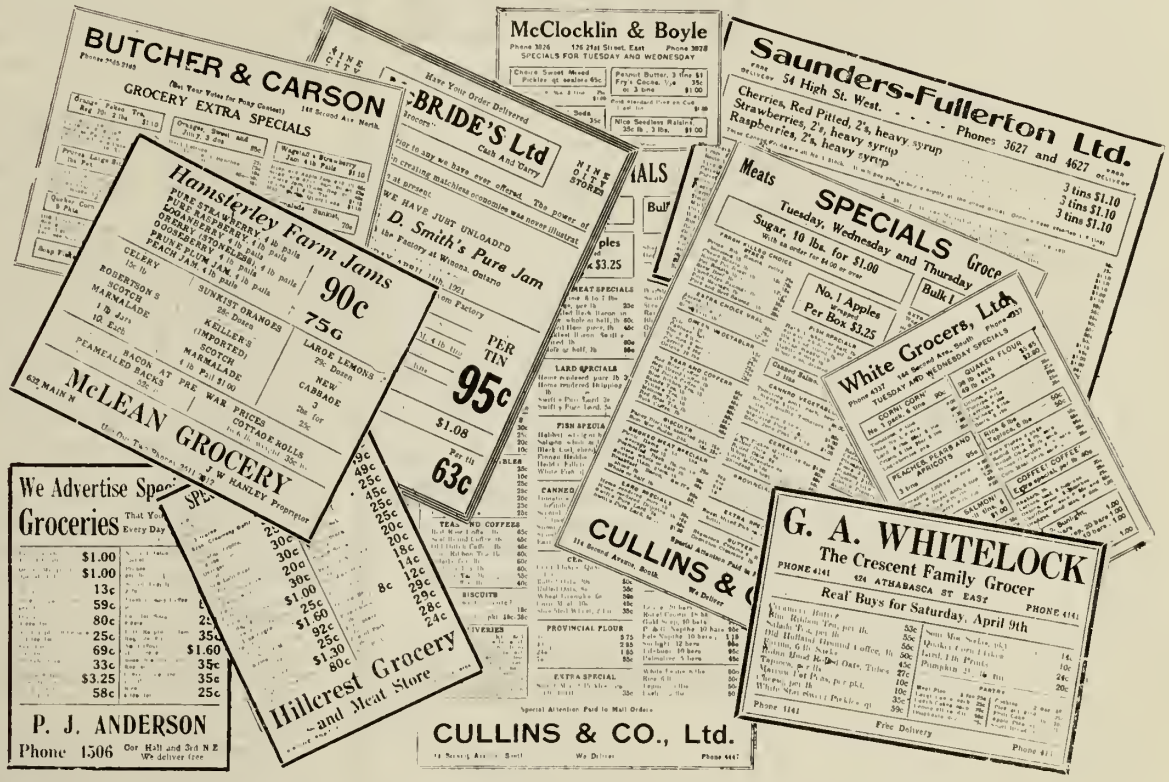
How Grocers in Saskatchewan Regularly Advertise

These Merchants Are Consistent Users of Newspaper Space and Believe That the Financial Outlay is Money Well Invested



THE above advertisements are selected from those of a number of grocers in the larger towns and cities of Saskatchewan, and represent regular and consistent advertisers who use space in the dailies of their respective towns. Some of these merchants use as much as ½ pages and others run ¼ pages. But the point is that these grocers are using newspaper space all the time and are getting results from it. According to the statement of one of these retailers advertisement in the daily press, linked with good window displays, sells goods for them, and the cost of advertising is looked upon as money well invested. It will be noticed from the accompanying advertisements that in each instance prices are quoted, giving the reader accurate information as to what the articles advertised are going to cost. It is in adhering to such a policy that the best results are obtainable. People want to know what they will have to pay for the line that appeals to them, and, of course, it is more often than not that the price makes the real appeal.

These advertisements have been chosen from a large assortment and have been selected because they are the advertisements of merchants who are regular users of space. They are all good, and, it is believed, have brought satisfactory results in the way of increased sales.

Can Trace Success to Special Efforts Given Coffee Sales

"If There is One Thing That Will Bring Customers to the Store it is Coffee," States One Merchant—"Be Particular About the Quality And the Price Will Be a Small Matter"—Sarnia Grocer Keeps Three Grades of Coffee But Sells More of a High-priced Line Than of the Cheaper Blends

"IF there is one thing that will bring customers to the store, it is good coffee," stated George A. Gow, Hamilton, Ont., recently. "When I first started in business I decided to concentrate all my selling efforts on coffee, and build up a business around it. During the past ten years this has been carried out, and we have now many regular customers who first started to trade with us through occasionally dropping in for a pound of coffee."

Concentrating Sales Effort

Many a retail business has been built up just on that one point. Concentrating selling efforts on one certain line, getting a reputation for it which eventually leads to steady customers, pays substantial returns. Many merchants can trace the success of their business to the fact that they have paid particular attention to the coffee department. This perhaps has meant long hours of work and study to find out the best blend and the flavor best liked by their customers, but the coffee department has turned out to be the best paying department in the store, not so much through actual sales on coffee as through the custom that the coffee business draws.

Canada is not considered a coffee drinking country, but the business is growing. There has been no better opportunity that at present to build up a coffee trade. Importers state that the general taste for coffee runs to the finer grades. They are constantly striving to obtain the highest quality grown. This then leads to the first principle in increasing a coffee trade—sell good coffee.

Sells the High Price One

"We have three grades of coffee," said Robert Kirby, Sarnia, Ont., the other day. "One sells at 40 cents, one at 60 cents and another at $1 per pound. It is the dollar grade that we push and recommend. The other grades we forget as much as possible. When a customer asks for coffee we talk the better grade and do not mention the lower prices unless they demand something cheaper. Sales on the high priced line average 125 pounds a week, the 60 cents line about 50 pounds, and the 40 cents one has a very limited sale."

One point that the merchant should constantly keep in mind is the customer's viewpoint is not always the price. It is the quality, and the customer in nearly every instance will remember the quality long after the price is forgotten.

Why His Sales Fell Off

The writer was recently in a store when the merchant remarked that sales of coffee were decreasing and that he could not figure it out, because they used to have a nice coffee business. Just then a customer came in and asked for a pound of coffee.

"What kind of coffee?" asked the clerk.

"Oh, I don't know," said the customer. "What kind have you got?"

"Forty-five, fifty and seventy cents a pound," said the clerk.

"Give me a pound of the forty-five," said the customer.

The customer then went out with a pound of the poorest coffee in the store.

It does not need much analyzing to find out why this merchant's coffee business has fallen down. This customer takes the coffee home, brews it with the usual care, but instead of having a delightful beverage, she gets something that does not appeal to her taste, and it is doubtful whether she ever returns to that store.

Varied Methods Employed

Methods employed by merchants to build sales of coffee are varied. Some have adopted the idea of placing the coffee mill in the window, claiming that the principle of motion and the odor of the grinding coffee permeating the air of the street has such an appetizing influence on the passer-by that he cannot resist the temptation to enter and make a purchase. Such has been the experience of J. Bambrick, Ottawa, Ont., whose annual sales of coffee run to 14,000 pounds.

J. McDougal & Sons, Ingersoll, Ont., have the coffee mill just inside the front door, and their sales jumped from 50 pounds a week to 200 pounds in six months.

V. R. Maylor, Forrest, Ont., installed a coffee mill in a window and his sales of coffee increased 15 per cent. in three months.

G. H. Knowles, Newmarket, Ont., has the coffee mill placed on the counter in such a prominent location that customers cannot fail to take the suggestion. This merchant's sales have increased 25 per cent. in nine months.

Scandrett Bros., London, Ont., owe the success of their coffee business to the fact that all the sales-people are being constantly reminded that they must push coffee, suggesting coffee to every customer who makes a purchase. Sales of coffee in this store were 8,321 pounds in 1918, 10,687 pounds in 1919 and in 1920 sales jumped to over 12,000 pounds.

Size of Town Unimportant

There are hundreds of other merchants who have built up an enviable reputation just on the strength of the quality of the coffee they sell. The reason the merchants mentioned above are chosen to illustrate this story is the fact that these merchants are located in various size towns, ranging from a population of 1,000 to 65,000 inhabitants. The experience of these merchants shows that the size of the town makes no difference in building a coffee trade. Each has his own way of going after it, but all have the same opinion that the goods must have quality.

As mentioned before, Canada being young in the coffee drinking habit must naturally need some tuition in the art of making coffee. This to a great extent can be done by the merchant, and it is bound to react in increased sales.

One of the commonest errors in making coffee, and perhaps responsible for more poor coffee beverage than any other, is the fact that so many housewives seem to think that boiling brings out the strength. Continued boiling to get the so-called strength simply brings out the bitter flavor of the woody substance that remains after the volatile oils, the real good of the bean, has been infused, and which no amount of cream and sugar will disguise. One of the easiest methods of making coffee is simply to use an old-fashioned coffee pot, placing in it a dessertspoonful for each cup required and one for the pot. Pour into it the required amount of furiously boiling water — not water that has been previously boiled or which is only partly brought to a boiling point. Then place the pot on the back of the stove to steep for ten minutes, but do not give the coffee any further boiling. Give the coffee a good vigorous stirring, which causes the grounds to settle to the bottom of the pot. The coffee is then ready to serve.

Buy Only Week's Requirements

Another valuable point worth considering is to purchase a supply that will be sufficient for a week's requirements, or at most a two weeks' supply. Coffee from the moment it is roasted commences to lose flavor and strength and it is a good plan for the merchant to have a standing order with the house supplying the coffee to be shipped at regular intervals.

Some merchants who are located in a city in close touch with a roaster, buy their coffee green, have it roasted every week, blend it themselves and grind it just as required for each individual order. They also advise customers to only buy a quantity sufficient for the week's consumption. Under this plan the coffee reaches the table in the shortest possible time after being roasted. There are other merchants, however, who are not so fortunately situated and must needs buy a larger quantity in a shipment on account of distance from the source of supply. But even under these conditions it would be an easy matter to form some plan that would keep a constant supply of fresh roasted coffee on hand.

Early History of Coffee

There are some interesting facts about the early history of coffee that the merchant could use to good advantage by embodying them in the advertising. The first use of coffee that has so far been discovered was not as a beverage but was used as a food by some of the wandering tribes of Africa in the year A. D. 875, and receiving its now universal name from the district of Kaffa. It appears that these tribes on long treks into other countries would carry with them practically nothing to eat except the berry of the coffee tree, roasted and pounded to a powder, which they would mix with grease and form into balls. It is claimed that one of these balls would sustain a man for a whole day better than a meal of meat.

The first use of coffee as a beverage comes from Arabia in the year 1285. According to an Arabian legend, one Hadji Omar, a pious dervish, was outlawed from Mocha, and when almost dying from hunger in the wilderness, he roasted some of the small round berries he found growing in the thickets. Some of these roasted berries accidentally fell into his drinking water, and he thus discovered the agreeable flavor and nutritious properties of the coffee berries.

Another Arabian legend attributes its first discovery in that country to a Mollah named Chadeley, who, upon being informed of the peculiar and exciting effects produced upon the goats whenever they happened to feed upon the leaves and fruit of a certain kind of tree, resolved to test the virtues of the fruit upon his monks, with whom he had considerable difficulty in keeping them awake during their nocturnal devotions. Preparing an infusion from the berries of the plant, he served it to them, with satisfactory results, the dervishes eagerly taking to the new and exciting beverage.

The First Coffee Houses

In 1554 coffee houses were first opened in Constantinople, and it soon became a favorite with all classes of people, the coffee houses being thronged with people day and night and the poorer classes actually begging in the streets for the purpose of purchasing coffee.

Coffee was first introduced into London, England, in 1640 and sold at $20 to $25 per pound. It made its first appearance in France in 1644, and into Holland in 1690. Since then the coffee drinking habit has grown into one of the world's biggest commercial enterprises.

Canada imported in 1920 coffee to the value of $4,785,751, a big increase over the preceding year. Coffee is fast becoming one of the most popular beverages.

Limburger cheese is ripened in an atmosphere that is damp. Full cases of this product weigh approximately 125 pounds. It comes put up in 1-pound and 2-pound bricks. It gets its name from Limburger, Belgium, where it originated. Its odor comes from the way the outside moisture decomposes during the ripening process.

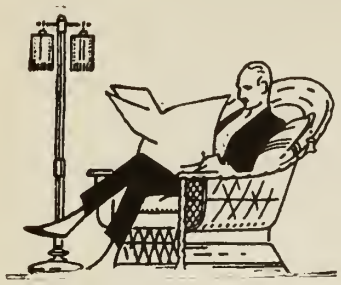
Sales of Soluble Coffee Do Not Interfere With Turnover in Regular Line

MANY retail merchants have one or two lines of commodities upon which they put special selling effort. They are often the foundation upon which a large part of their business is built. Some merchants specialize on bacon, others on tea or coffee, and still others have built up a big business on eggs. Merchants who carry out this idea state that a great portion of their sales are due to that one fact—"specialize on one or two lines that have some particular quality that appeals to the public, and you soon find customers coming from all parts of the city to get that article. Eventually they become regular customers." Such are the words of a retail merchant who has spent a life-time behind the retail grocery counter.

T. A. Rowat & Co., London, Ont., are such merchants. Rowat's coffee has become a by-word for quality not only in the city of London, but for many miles around. Sales run well into 16,000 pounds a year. Perhaps for that reason, Mr. Rowat was skeptical about allowing a certain brand of soluble coffee to be demonstrated in the store. He argued that the featuring of a line of this kind would detract the sales from his own blend upon which he had built up an enviable reputation by hard work and perseverance.

Mr. Rowat, however, always on the watch for new lines and new fields to explore, finally consented to have a demonstration for one day. It happened to be a Saturday.

"It was a pleasant surprise to me at the number of sales that were made during the demonstration," remarked Mr. Rowat to a Canadian Grocer representative. "I noticed at the time and since that the people who buy——— soluble coffee are those that do not use coffee every day, but probably once a week and desire to have coffee in the house. Others who buy it are roomers who perhaps have not the facilities for making coffee. There are also others who buy it for its convenience and as sales on our own blend are steadily increasing and also sales on ——— coffee show a nice increase, since we have been featuring it, it proves to me that talking and pushing this soluble coffee does not in any way interfere with the sales of our own blend, but rather tends to stimulate the demand."



"An Advertisement is Valuable Only When It Is Interesting"

"AN advertisement is valuable only when it is interesting." In thus speaking, G. Dubuc, of the Paquet Company, Ltd., Quebec, P.Q., has sounded the real fundamental of the psychology of advertising. An advertisement to be successful must create some interest in the mind of the prospective purchaser or otherwise that advertisement will be valueless.

A splendid illustration of this point was recently carried out in the Paquet store. This firm put on a contest in which four roosters were the leading feature. In the centre of the store was arranged a square display stand, each corner being occupied with a coop in which was placed a rooster. The intermediate portions of the stand were taken up by an attractive display of hams, bacon and eggs.

Chief Topic of Conversation

An anouncement then appeared in the papers inviting all the boys and girls to come to the store to tell which of the roosters would crow the most and how many times in seven days. The contest stirred up so much interest that it was the principal topic of conversation on the street, in the homes and the schools. Over 6,000 answered and on Thursday the last day of the contest, as announced in the previous day's advertisement, all children accompanied by their parents who visited the store betwen the hours of two and five in the afternoon would be greeted with a big surprise. This surprise was in the form of a bar of chocolate. Eight hundred bars were distributed.

The Result in Sales

The actual result in sales for that week was very gratifying. For instance, 210 hams and more than 2,400 dozen of eggs were sold over the counter. But the greatest benefit that the Paquet store received from the "crowing contest" was the advertisement through the thousands of children who went to the store from all parts of the city.

The Paquet Company makes a specialty of putting on contests that interest the children. Through these contests they get the interest of the whole population. This is based on the principle that the child leads, in a sense, the parent. The influence the child exerts over the parent to make certain purchases or the interest that the child creates in certain stores by continually discussing that store at home is well worth considering. If the influence of the child can be secured, then the interest and patronage of the parent will probably follow. At any rate this has been successfully planned and executed by the Paquet Company on many occasions, and it has resulted in swelling the list of special buyers who eventually become permanent customers of the store.

The Children's Interest

"We aim to get the interest of the children," said Mr. Dubuc, "and when we get several thousand children registered in a contest, the amount of talking they do on the street, in the home and in school is bound to react in bringing our name before the parents. These contests are very successful. Usually we have a guessing contest, and there are several prizes given for the correct answer."

A permanent feature of the Paquet store is a demonstrating counter. This counter is equipped with all the necessary appliances to carry the demonstration to a successful climax. Gas and electric water heaters and stoves are permanent fixtures, so that when a demonstrator is sent out by a manufacturer there are no attachments to be made. Mr. Dubuc is enthusiastic about demonstrations as they tend to bring women into the store.

Co-operates With Demonstrator

During a contest this demonstrating counter is in full swing, and every advantage is taken to stimulate sales by co-operating with the demonstrator.

The store is also made more attractive during a contest by special decorations, and it is surprising the effect that can be obtained by the use of a few potted plants, a vase or two of cut flowers or artificial flowers tastefully arranged.

Screening Off Empty Spaces Of a Window

A rather novel method of dressing a window has been adopted by a Brockville grocer. This grocer has cut a rose pattern from a wallpaper border and draped the cluster of roses around the top and sides of his window. The paper is pasted lightly against the glass of the window and so serves a double purpose. In the first place it is very attractive. Besides being novel it is pretty. The second purpose, while not quite so evident, is nevertheless more profitable to the grocer. It makes the eye turn towards the interior of the window, which after all is the object of the whole display. The arch of roses formed by the border across the top seems to confine the attention to the display in the window, just as peeking through a small window permits a view of only a small part of the interior. In this case the attention of the passer-by is confined to the very part of the window that the grocer has arranged for the advertisement of his goods. This idea might easily be adopted by other grocers. The wallpaper pattern is not necessary to obtain the desired results. Any plan that screens off the empty spaces of the window and confines attention to the display in the window is very effective.

"Crowing Contest" in the Paquet Store, Quebec, P.Q. In each of the coops was placed a rooster and each child was requested to estimate which rooster would crow the most and how many times in seven days. Over 6,000 children registered. During the contest 210 hams and over 2,400 dozen of eggs were sold.

Simple Arrangement is Inaugurated, Readily Estimating Stock on Hand and Lines that Sell at an Advantage

McPherson Bros., St. John, N.B., Adopt Unique Plan in Their System of Stock-taking—Scheme Has Been in Operation For Last Few Months and is Proving Very Satisfactory—Every Sale is Recorded

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

ST. JOHN, N.B., May 2.—Entering upon its forty-fifth year of business, forty-three of which have been spent in the present stand in Union St., McPherson Brothers, retail grocers, have inaugurated a new system of stock-taking that makes possible an accurate estimate of the amount of stock on hand at any time, and also shows what lines are selling to advantage. The arrangement is simple and entails little extra work.

Obtaining Percentage of Profit

A physical inventory is taken as usual, filling in the actual cost, allowing for depreciation, and at the same time filling in the proposed selling price. The difference shows the proposed profit and by dividing the proposed profit by the selling price, the percentage of profit can be ascertained. Each day at the close of business the total sold for cash or on credit is made up. From this is taken the percentage of profit as shown for the day, and the respective amounts are taken from both the cost and selling side of the inventory. As goods come in each day they are added in the same manner to the stock sheet.

In the event of a special sale in any line at reduced prices, the difference between the proposed selling price and the actual selling price is charged to the loss side of profit and loss. In the same manner an advance in price is placed on the profit side. The scheme has been in operation for the last few months and is working out to the general satisfaction of the firm.

Every Sale Recorded

Another new feature which has been added to the business recently is that of recording every sale, both the item and amount. Each clerk has a separate drawer in the cash register and it is thus possible to check his or her cash with the sales slips turned in at the end of the day. Charge accounts are also kept in order in this manner and the sales slips form the medium for operating the stock system as outlined above.

Striking and frequently changed displays are used in preference to advertising to keep the wares of the McPherson store before its regular and prospective customers. The goods exhibited in the spacious windows are changed almost daily and inside the store the contents of cases and tables are often changed. One day canned goods will form the central figure in exhibition, followed the next day by fruits, and so on. Prices are always shown.

McPherson Brothers is now one of the few of the older retail grocery firms in the city. The retirement of M. & H. Gallagher and the F. E. Williams Co. from the grocery trade this spring cuts down the list of "old timers" to less than half a dozen. All the original members of the McPherson firm are now dead, the senior brother, Thomas J., having passed away last June. The business is now being conducted by his son, J. Bruce McPherson. The other members of the original firm were Samuel B., Charles D. and Thomas R. McPherson, all of whom died some years ago.

Filling Hampers for Campers is Profitable Service

Wentzells, Limited, Halifax, N.S., Finds Service to Campers and Summer Cottagers is Worth-While Business—People Call Wentzells on the Telephone, Stating When They Are Leaving on Trip, and Their Hamper With All Requisites for an Outing is Ready for Them.

"WE make a special feature of supplying hampers for campers," Fred B. Day, manager of the retail department of Wentzells Limited, Halifax, N.S., told a representative of Canadian Grocer recently, when spoken to in regard to this particular branch of their business. This feature is one of the particular prides of Mr. Day's work, and he takes special pleasure in looking after the same. He himself is a great lover of the out-of-doors, and has a first-hand knowledge of what people enjoy when going on a fishing or hunting trip. The accompanying advertisement shows how Mr. Day has gone after this business, and he has aimed to give such service that people are showing their appreciation in constantly repeating orders during the summer. Persons anticipating hunting, fishing or yachting trips call this department and either give a list of things they will need, or name an approximate sum of money that they wish to spend. The matter is very frequently left with Mr. Day and his staff, and he uses his own judgment in making up the hamper, when specific instructions are not given.

In Cardboard Cartons

The size of the hamper depends on the nature of the trip, of course, how long the party will be away, the distance they are going, their means of conveyance, and other such details. Some people prefer to send their own wicker cases, while others travelling in trains or motor cars have cardboard cartons. Halifax being primarily a seaport town, there is always a large number of naval officers and men spending a few days in the place. A trip to the woods appeals to them after a long sea voyage, and Mr. Day told Canadian Grocer that among their patrons for hampers the naval officers are their chief customers. In fact, it was because of their constant inquiry for supplies of this kind that he conceived the idea of making a regular department of it and of extending this feature to include the city people as well. This service of supplying hampers is now well established, having shown steady and consistent expansion, until now it requires considerable attention. In some instances complete camping outfits are rented to people, and in this regard the naval men are especially appreciative of such a service.

Canned Goods Popular

"I find the preparation of these hampers very interesting," Mr. Day remarked. "A great deal of detail is required in seeing to it that every little thing is in the hamper that is going to render the trip a pleasure and as convenient as possible. Canned fruits, canned milk, beans, canned meats, bacon, cooked hams, and many other edibles that can be quickly and easily prepared, and at the same time supply an appetizing meal to a hungry party, constitute the hampers. Many minor but important things that the camper is apt to forget are never omitted. It is our special care to see that all requisites are in the hamper, and experience has taught us what is most appreciated. For instance, apart from the actual foods that are necessary, there are matches, candles, dry kindlings, and such things. We also supply cardboard dishes and campers' spoons. In fact, we overlook nothing. People telephone us stating what time they are leaving, the number in the party, and we do the rest. Their hamper is ready for them when they are ready to start. We provide a unique service, eliminating worry and bother on the part of the people as to what to get ready, apart from the time it takes the average person to prepare supplies for a fishing or hunting expedition."

This Grocery Firm Serves Southern Alberta Through Medium of Catalogue Replete With Prices

The Good Co., Ltd., Lethbridge, Alta., Has Built Up an Extensive Trade, Sending Their Catalogues to Practically Every Householder in Southern Alberta—No Free Deliveries Are Made and Business is Strictly Cash

THROUGH a catalogue that is distributed widespread throughout the surrounding country, the Good Co., Ltd., of Lethbridge, Alta., has built up a large business. Their main store at Lethbridge is one of the largest of its kind in the province, and the feature of the business is that no deliveries are made. The farmer and city folk are on the same plane. All must carry home their goods. In the case of the mail orders, which are on a rather extensive scale, goods are sold f.o.b. warehouse, freight, express, delivery and cartage charges being extra.

A Complete Price List

The catalogue of the Good Co. is a most complete price list, and is sent to almost every householder in Southern Alberta. In this way this firm enjoys the patronage of many in this section of the province, apart from the large town clientele. The Good Co. is known as the spot cash grocery house. The catalogue is revised according to markets every month, and new ones are sent to the customers, so that all patrons have the advantage of price changes. In the spring of last year a new store was opened at Taber, Alta., and a good deal of business is now handled from that centre.

Cuts Down Bookkeeping

For some years the Good Co. operated on the regular plan of delivering and credit extensions, but for the past year or more have adhered strictly to the cash-and-carry way of merchandising. "Since we reconstructed our business and transformed it into a live, go-ahead cash store, we have found out just what the people of Lethbridge and district wanted," the manager of the company told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "Since starting on a cash system we have cut down a great deal of bookkeeping. There are now no deliveries and bad debts are a thing of the past. We have been able to give our customers the advantage by selling at a much cheaper rate, and, having the cash, we, too, can buy better. We aim to sell only the best quality goods, and we believe our success has been largely due to this fact. We are receiving repeat orders all the time through the mails, and that is the best guarantee that our present way of doing business is appreciated."

Alphabetically Arranged

The catalogue of the Good Co. is attractively gotten up. It is replete with information, and the lists of prices give the customer the necessary assistance in the making out of an order. Goods are arranged in alphabetical style, and this, too, facilitates the matter of writing out an order. It renders the consulting of prices an easy matter. An insert in the centre of the book, in red leaves, is called "Our Special Section." A review of market conditions in general groceries is given, with timely talks to the people about seasonable lines that are arriving. The special prices on lines that are being specially offered for the month are here stated. These are commodities that are offered at lower figures for the current month, and each catalogue that goes out contains a list of articles that represent attractive values.

Use Deposit Accounts

"We give our mail orders particular attention," the manager continued. "All goods shipped out are double checked by experienced men, and we guarantee satisfaction on all orders. When too much money is sent we return the amount over. All goods not paid for when ordered are sent C.O.D. We do a very large and extensive trade in butter and eggs in this section of the province. We are prepared to buy all supplies offered, and we pay cash or give goods in exchange just as the customer desires. Customers living at a distance have the privilege of a deposit account, and buy on it from time to time. A great many of our out of town people buy in this way. All our quotations are made subject to market changes, and are likely to change without notice.

Gratifying Increase

"While our mail order business is on a very large scale, our trade in Lethbridge and also in Taber, where we have had a store a little over a year, shows gratifying increase. It is, of course, strictly cash, and absolutely no deliveries are made. Everything in the store is priced so that the people can readily see the cost of any article. Changing from the old system to the new, there were some of our people who did not take at once to the new plan, but now that it has been firmly established we believe our business has grown. The public have shown their appreciation by their steady and consistent patronage, and we have endeavored at all times to give our patrons the benefit of paying cash. I think the cash basis is working out to the benefit of everyone."

Putting the Punch in Window Cards and Tags

Ninety Per Cent. of the Retail Store Window Displays Require Price Tags and Cards—These Can Be Made One of the Biggest Selling Factors in the Store's Policy if They Are Utilized in a Clever Way

WINDOW cards and price tags are a part of the essential equipment for the dressing of ninety per cent. of the average window displays. Once in a while a display is so extraordinary or so forceful that no price tags and no window cards are needed to complete the story, but such displays are few and far between, and the general thing is to use price tags and cards quite extensively.

Such cards and tags have in themselves a very definite sales punch. They carry specific and interesting information about the goods on display and about the store itself. And, for that reason, they help sell goods in no uncertain manner.

But, in addition to this original punch which all price tags and the majority of window cards have, they can be given an additional sales punch which will make them doubly valuable to the store which uses them. And this double sales punch will also be calculated to make the displays more interesting and decidedly different from the ordinary run of displays.

Let's look at this proposition more closely and see just what is meant by this double sales punch and how such a double punch can be given to the cards and tags.

Let us suppose, for instance, that the store has a display showing certain summer lines, and let us suppose that every article in the window carries a price tag and that accompanying window cards tell of the excellent quality of the goods. Now, under ordinary circumstances, such tags and cards would be simply bits of cardboard which were attractively lettered by a skilled card painter. The lettering would be very well done, the colors used would harmonize with the display itself and the work would be a high-class example of the sign painter at his best.

But, except for the copy on the cards and the prices, the material would not hook up with the display in any particularly effective fashion. There would not even be uniformity in the shapes of the tags and the cards and there would be nothing especially distinctive about the cards or the tags.

Link Them With Display

Suppose, now, that instead of using merely nondescript tags and cards the store decided to hook them up with the display. And suppose that for tags the store used bits of cardboard cut out to resemble fruit or some article you are showing. And suppose that for the cards the store used larger sheets of cardboard cut to make the same outline. Suppose that the suggestion of articles contained in the outline of the tags and cards was emphasized by the store by the use of a little paint to indicate the various articles. When this was done each tag and each card would resemble all the other tags and cards, and the very appearance of the objects would serve to call additional attention to the display and would further impress the idea of these lines upon the minds of those people who looked in at the display.

Certainly it would seem as though some such uniformity as this in the tags and cards used in the advertising of summer lines in window displays would give a more interesting and more uniform appearance to the window than if merely ordinary tags and cards were used. And it would seem as though this double punch to these essential articles of window dressing would serve to make the windows more interesting as well as to give them a greater sales value.

People always like new things in window displays. Little stunts catch their eyes and make them talk. And a stunt of this character which would be so different from the usual thing would be sure to create more than passing interest.

Of course, a stunt of this kind isn't a tremendously difficult thing to put over, and is a stunt which, moreover, when combined with exceedingly attractive displays and with other alert and up-to-date ideas in other phases of the store management, will go far toward helping along the store's reputation for being just a little ahead of other establishments.

Of course, the use of stunt price tags and window cards, as they might be called, need not be confined alone to cut-outs, as here mentioned. Suppose, for instance, that the store is observing a birthday. If this is the case what would be more appropriate than to have the tags and cards all shaped like the outline of the store's home or to resemble the figure denoting the number of years the store has been in business? Or if the store is putting on a special sale of some character, why couldn't all the tags and cards used in advertising the sale be framed to make the outline of the letters "SALE" and thereby call further attention to the fact that the store is selling goods at special prices?

> Nowadays when competition in the retail business is so very keen it behooves every enterprising merchant to take advantage of every little thing which will help sell his goods. It behooves him to try and get a double punch into his price tags and window cards, because the more sales force there is in his windows the more goods he is certain to sell. Window cards and price tags are a part of the essential equipment required for the dressing of ninety per cent. of the average window displays. It is only rarely that a display is so extraordinary or forceful that no price tag nor window cards are needed to complete it.

Timely Display

Suppose, again, the town is having some special celebration. In such a case the store would naturally want to put on a special window and it would certainly give a much more interesting and attractive appearance to such a window to have all the tags and cards in the window framed appropriate to the particular character of the celebration.

There are all sorts of unusual and interesting things which can be done with price tags and window cards, and which are calculated to give to these objects a double punch. And some of these things are entirely different from the usage told above by means of which the tags would be given a uniformity of appearance in keeping with the goods displayed or special events observed by the store or the city in which the store is located.

For instance, suppose that at the top of every price tag appearing in a certain sales window appeared a single letter, such as "A" or "E," and so on. And suppose that these letters were painted in red or in some color which would make them stand out prominently. Now, when the folks looked in at the window a lot of people would most naturally remark:

"What does that 'A' on that tag mean?"

Or—

"What's the idea of putting different letters at the top of each of those price tags?"

Then the object of the stunt might be told in a window card which would carry a jumble of letters across the top, thereby hooking it up with the letters on the price tags. The idea behind the stunt might be revealed like this lettering on this card:

"WHAT DO THE LETTERS ON THE PRICE TAGS SAY?"

"These letters carry an important message to YOU.

"Read them from RIGHT to LEFT and see what they say. Start with the tag at the extreme right of this window and then follow the tags to the extreme left. You'll be interested in the message conveyed by these letters."

A great many people would, of course, have been trying to join the letters into words by reading them from the left to the right in the usual way, and so these people and a lot of others would be very much interested in reading them in just the opposite way to the usual manner and in seeing what the mysterious message was.

The message itself might be something like this:

SOMETHING FOR THAT PICNIC OF YOURS.

Of course, such a message as this would be important to everyone who were thinking of going on a picnic, as nearly everybody does in the summer, and it is certain that this method of getting the message across would create a lot more comment than merely to state it in the ordinary way on a window card. A large percentage of the women of the city would, undoubtedly, talk about the stunt in some such way as this:

"Did you see the novel way the store dressed its window the other day? They do it by the means of letters on the price tags. You read the letters backwards starting with the first tag at the right of the window, and the letters then spell 'Something for that picnic of yours!' I thought it was very clever, and it made me all the more anxious to get things because I know that when I buy at the store I'll be getting something that has quality."

Illuminated Tags

Another things that might be done with the price tags and the window cards would be to affix a little electric light bulb over each tag and card. This could be very readily done by the use of the sort of electric lights that are furnished complete for use on Christmas trees. Then, at night, these lights might be turned on and the appearance of all these lights in the window—the lights, perhaps, being of different colors—would attract an immense amount of attention and would, of course, centre the major portion of this attention upon the tags themselves, thereby forcefully impressing the prices upon the minds of all those people looking in at the windows. Such a stunt as this would be especially effective in instances where the prices were of themselves notable and where the store was especially anxious to emphasize this fact.

In addition to this original punch which all price tags and the majority of window cards have, they can be given an additional sales punch which will make them doubly valuable to the store which uses them. This double sales punch will also be calculated to make the displays more interesting and decidedly different from the ordinary run of displays. Instead of using merely nondescript tags and cards link them up with the display, using bits of cardboard cut out to resemble some of the lines you are showing. For the cards too use larger cardboard cut in the same designs as the tags.

Emphasizing Special Uses

Still another thing that might be done with the price tags and the window cards would be to frame tags and cards which would be in harmony with the occasions upon which the articles shown were to be used. For instance, suppose that the store is making a display of delicacies suited for afternoon card parties. Then the price tags might be made to look like the various kinds of playing cards —ten spot, eight spot, etc.—and the window cards might be made to resemble the face cards. Such a use of the tags and cards would give added punch to any statement appearing upon the window cards to the effect that these food lines shown were especially suited for afternoon card parties, afternoon teas and other similar affairs.

Nowadays when competition in the retail business is so very keen it behooves every enterprising merchant to take advantage of every little thing which will help sell his goods. And it behooves him to try and get a double punch into his price tags and window cards because the more sales force there is in his windows the more goods he is certain to sell.

THIS "WASHOUT" GOT RESULTS

After having taken stock a merchant in Saskatchewan found that he had a miscellaneous collection of different lines that were not enjoying a ready sale. The majority of these lines were odd lots and many were only represented by one or two packages. A large wash tub, with washboard and cake of soap, and a buxom figure in a big checked apron bending over it occupied the centre of the window. Clothes lines were strung about the window, to which were fastened the various articles that the merchant wished to clear out and fastened to each was a price tag. A big show card announced "Great washout of broken lines of goods, found after stocktaking. Must be sold to make room for new goods."

POINTS TO CONSIDER

To increase the sales on toilet soaps a merchant the other day made a feature of the various brands he was carrying in the following manner. A large star was constructed out of wall board and covered with cheesecloth, puffed nice and full, the alternate points of pale blue and white. On each of the points were fastened the soap that was being featured, while a round blue card lettered in white reading "Good Points to be Considered" was fastened in the centre of the star, which was then suspended in the centre of the window, surrounded with neat piles of the soap and each pile bearing a neat price ticket.

LIVE BEES HELP HONEY SALES

A merchant in Western Ontario had a glass case in his show window containing a section of honey out of a beehive, with hundreds of the busy little workers in full activity. The balance of the window was taken up with an attractive display of honey in the comb, tins and various size glass jars. A show card announcing, "We sell only strictly pure honey," occupied a prominent position.

FREE ICE CREAM SODAS

A retail grocer in Western Ontario installed a soda fountain in connection with the grocery. To get customers interested in the new department he advertised that all customers purchasing goods to the amount of one dollar or more on a certain Saturday would be presented with a soda check good for an ice cream soda or dish of ice cream any time during the summer season.

Sells Bananas by the Pound and Increases the Profits

J. M. Gibbs, Parkhill, Ont., Finds it is the Only Profitable Way to Dispose of Them at the Present Time —In This Way the Small Ones Need Not be Sold at a Bargain

"ONE dozen bananas, please! How much are they?" said a customer in the store of J. M. Gibbs, Parkhill, Ont., in the hearing of a Canadian Grocer representative, during the occasion of a recent visit.

"They are 15 cents per pound or two pounds for 25 cents," replied J. T. Graham, manager of the grocery department.

"That is a funny way to sell bananas. I don't want a pound. I want a dozen," said the customer.

Mr. Graham showed the customer over to the side of the store where several bunches of bananas were hanging and said, "The last customer who bought bananas picked out all the large ones, and in order to give you as good value, we are selling these by the pound. If I did not do that I would have to charge you the same price per dozen for these smaller ones as the lady before you paid for the larger ones, which of course would be hardly fair to you."

Customer Well Pleased

"That seems reasonable. Just cut off a dozen and weigh them up," said the customer. It was done, and the customer went out well pleased with her purchase.

Once upon a time the merchant could have purchased a fair sized bunch of bananas for around 90 cents, or a good big one weighing 80 pounds or perhaps more for $1.50. These bananas were sold for 15 or 20 cents per dozen, showing the merchant a real profit. Conditions have greatly changed since then. Bananas have greatly increased in price and are now purchased by the pound. The merchant in re-selling by the dozen has considerable difficulty in getting his money back, even when the price is set around 40 or 50 cents per dozen.

The only logical method then is for the merchant to sell by the pound at such a price that will show at least a small return for his investment. That some merchants are doing this and doing it diplomatically is evidenced by the above incident which occurred in the store of J. M. Gibbs, in Parkhill, Ont.

"When bananas were cheaper, we could make a good profit by selling by the dozen," said Mr. Graham, the manager, "but since the price has got so high we found that it was almost impossible to break even. Now, however, it is different, since selling by the pound, we find that we can make at least a dollar on every bunch and sometimes more. Another feature is that there are no leftovers to sell at a bargain price. The small ones are worked in with the bigger ones and weighed up together. It is better also for the customer, because she gets just the amount of bananas she pays for. We sometimes have complaints, like the customer who just went out, but when they are handled the same as I did that one they are usually convinced and go away pleased with the change in the method of selling. My idea is to make the customer feel that she is the one that is receiving the benefit. In this way we have little difficulty in bringing the customer around to our viewpoint."

"The Only Fair Way to Sell Bananas is by Weight"

Other Grocers Express Opinions in Regard to Selling Bananas By the Pound, Declaring That it is the Only System That Gives Satisfaction

A GROCER in Sherbrooke, Que., has not only adopted plan of selling oranges by peck but sells bananas by weight. This perhaps is not quite as novel an idea, since many merchants are now selling bananas in that way. This grocer explains that many customers come in to buy bananas, and when buying by the dozen pick out all the big ones and leave the smaller ones. It follows then that if a customer telephones an order, and these are generally the grocer's best customers, she has to take what is left and in many cases the grocer is embarrassed by the size of the fruit that he is obliged to send, since the choice has been left to his judgment. Since this new plan was adopted, if a customer buys a dozen large bananas they have to pay a higher price for them, since they are getting full value for their money. If, however, smaller bananas are chosen there is less weight per dozen and consequently cost less. This grocer set a price of 15 cents per pound on bananas and since they vary considerably in size the price per dozen also varies. He explained to Canadian Grocer representative that this plan too has pleased his customers since they realize the fairness of the proposition and appreciate that the grocer is only attempting to give them better value for their money.

System Gives Satisfaction

W. Johnston, grocer, of Lennoxville, also sells bananas by weight and claims that it is the only just and fair way to sell the fruit. He stated to Canadian Grocer representative that not only are his customers pleased with the plan but when he weighs a stock of bananas and calculates what he will get for them by selling them by weight he finds that there is more money in handling them that way than by selling them by the dozen. He also stated that it gives the grocer more scope in his buying since he can buy his fruit on the quality of the fruit itself and not on the size of the stock he is getting. Mr. Johnston states that many of the wholesale fruit merchants are selling bananas now by weight, which facilitates the matter for the grocer who would adopt this plan. "The extra trouble in weighing the fruit, which with the modern scale is negligible, is more than repaid in the satisfaction both the grocer and his customers get from the system," concluded Mr. Johnston.

A Better System All Round

Canadian Grocer referred this question to Mr. Stewart, of the Peterson Fruit Co., of Montreal, and asked for his opinion of this system of selling fruit. Mr. Stewart said: "I am convinced that it is the most advantageous way of selling fruit from the standpoint of the wholesale fruit merchant, the grocer and Making a specialty of fruit has been the secret of Miss Ker's success. Tempting arrangements of fruits, such as shown here, are always the means of increasing sales.

Giving a Feminine Touch to the Fruit Business and Making It Pay

One Month's Sale of Fruits in Miss Ker's Store in Montreal Last Summer Totalled Over Eleven Thousand Dollars—Sales in the Winter Months, Too, Are Large—Sells No Other Lines But Fruit

MISS KER, the proprietress of J. E. Ker & Co. fruit store, St. James Street, Montreal, has ommercialized the feminine touch to he fruit business so that in the down-own section of Montreal she has de-eloped the sale of fruit to the point here the sales mount up as high as even thousand dollars a month in arge accounts in fruit alone. Sales such big proportions come in the mmer months, but the sales for the inter months, too, are very large. Miss er states that nearly all her customers e business men, and that the secret the business is in being able to give em service, and at the same time give ntinual satisfaction.

The fruit window reproduced in this sue shows plainly the feminine touch at characterizes this business. To ose who know Montreal the site of is store might not seem advantageous the fruit business, but knowing human ture Miss Ker and her sisters have en able to turn large sales of fruit to eir store through the business men o daily frequent this section of the y.

The Feminine Touch

By far the greater portion of the cus-mers of this store are the business men ose wives instruct them to bring me fruit home with them in the even-. Like men, they forget or do not re to stop in at a store on the way business to buy fruit and so some time through the day they call up Miss Ker and ask her to prepare for them a basket of fruit, requesting that it either be sent up or stating that they will call for it on their way home. It is in these sales that these ladies have succeeded in adding to their service the feminine touch which has secured for them the trade of the business men of the down-town section of Montreal. There is something very pleasing about the way the orders are put up, and the attention that is given to each customer.

Big Summer Trade

There is another advantage to this downtown site which at first is not apparent. During the summer months a great majority of the business men live outside of the city. They come in every morning from points along the river and from some of the lakes along the St. Lawrence and in the evening take the train back to their summer residences.

As a result these men rarely have time to go uptown and in the afternoon before they leave for home they telephone an order to this fruit store. Besides this Miss Ker has one delivery truck and next summer she expects to have two, which will make two lake shore deliveries a week. When it is considered that this store sells practically nothing but fruit, and that the one truck is kept continually busy delivering telephone orders and a second truck is now required, the possibilities of specializing in the fruit business can be realized.

To Open New Store

At the present time Miss Ker has only the front part of a grocery store which she has rented on a short lease, but she expects to move to a new and even better equipped store only half a block away. When asked by a Canadian Grocer representative what was the secret of developing a large fruit trade in this down-town section, Miss Ker said, "The secret is simply choice fruit, good service and the ability to make every customer feel that he or she is receiving special attention."

Parmesan cheese is a hardy cheese from the sunny shores of Italy, granular in appearance when broken, and after imported here usually is packed in grated form in bottles. It is a good keeper, and is ideal for seasoning macaroni or serving with soups.

"Display Will Sell Fruit All the Time"

"There is Nothing Like a Window of Fruit to Increase Sales," Says Joseph Dawson, of Dawson & Co., Brampton, Ont.—Sells Twenty-five Bunches of Bananas on an Average Every Week

"THERE is nothing like a window display to sell fruit," remarked Joseph Dawson, of Dawson & Co., Brampton, Ont., to a representative of Canadian Grocer recently. Dawson & Co. run fruit sales into large figures during the course of a year. They specialize in fruit twelve months of the year. During the winter months the turnover in oranges and other citric fruits is on a large scale. In the spring Dawson & Co. start early to sell the southern fruits and vegetables, and when the Canadian fresh fruits are available they dispose of great quantities of them. They have also found bananas a profitable line, and have concentrated on their sale. "From May until October," remarked Mr. Dawson, "we have averaged as many as twenty-five bunches a week, and before Italian fruit stores established in the town we have sold as many as twenty-five bunches on a Saturday."

Cut Bananas From Stalk

"Window displays always play a big part in our fruit sales. We usually keep one window for fruits and vegetables, and sell largely from the window. In our sales of bananas we have had a good deal of success in following the method of cutting the bananas off the stalk and piling them in bulk in the window. It is surprising the number that can be sold in this way. Cutting them up ahead of time, too, facilitates serving people, and in this way sales are increased. Bananas in our store are a good, steady turnover week in and week out. They show a good profit and are an easy line to handle."

"Have you ever sold bananas by the pound?" Mr. Dawson was asked.

"No, we always sell them by the dozen," he replied. "I believe, however, that it would be a good method to follow, as once the people got accustomed to the practice, it would eliminate customer picking over the bananas in order to get all the large ones, and loss from waste would be reduced to a minimum."

Orange Sales 25 Cases Weekly

Sales of oranges in the Dawson store total twenty-five cases weekly. "From the time the orange season commences we sell oranges. This fruit represents a quick turnover and a reasonable profit. We usually buy cases of 200s and 216s and then mix the two sizes together. We have them on display practically all the time, always keeping them well to the front. Display is the big factor in selling oranges, and sales can be greatly increased if they are kept constantly before your trade."

Mr. Dawson told Canadian Grocer that he believed in concentrating selling effort on special lines. "It is very often the specialties that show the greatest profit," he added. "It is always possible to sell something other than what the customer specifically orders. So called 'extras' are very often not thought of, and if the grocer or his selling staff do not think of them they will never be sold. A suggestion of some line to a customer almost invariably results in a sale."

The arrangement of Dawson's store is in itself sufficient to attract trade. Goods are very well displayed in such a way that buying is inevitable. The windows, of course, are used to the best possible advantage, and always display some special line. But as stated previously in this article, one is almost invariably used for the showing of fruits and vegetables. In these spring days Mr. Dawson makes a strong feature of his southern fruits and vegetables, his weekly turnover in these products showing very gratifying figures.

Fruits represent heavy sales in the store of Dawson & Co., at Brampton, Ont. This illustration shows the well arranged interior.

GETTING THE INTEREST OF THE CHILDREN

To increase the sales on a certain brand of breakfast food, a merchant in an Eastern town had printed gummed labels bearing his name and address which he put on the packages of breakfast food. He then advertised in the local paper and also in his window that to each child who brought back to the store ten empty packages bearing his name, he would give a bag of marbles free. This merchant said that his sales were increased 300 per cent. and that many new regular customers were obtained for the store through the influence of the child.

ONLY FAIR WAY TO SELL BANANAS

the public. In the first place I believe that it increases the consumption of fruit. It is the fairest system I know of and it insures the dealers against losses that otherwise would occur. In the case of bananas we always have a number of loose fruit in every car. Very often they are left in the car, but if we were selling by weight to the grocer and he in turn was selling by weight to his customers, we could dispose of this loose fruit.

Helping to Dispose of Consignments of Fruits by Making an Appealing Display

This Grocer Sells Oranges by the Peck

Idea of Merchant in Sherbrooke, Que., Proves Popular With Customers and Results are Profitable

SHERBROOKE, P.Q., May 2.—While a representative of Canadian Grocer was in the office of the proprietor of one of the grocery stores in this city a very interesting telephone order was received by the owner of the store. The customer called up to ask for, among other things, half a dozen of sixty-cent oranges. The reply of the grocer attracted attention, for he said, "I can give you half a dozen of the sixty-cent oranges, but we are now selling a good quality orange at one dollar a peck. I would like very much to have you try buying your oranges by the peck, since I am sure I can give you better value for your money." The suggestion was accepted and the grocer wrote the order for a peck of oranges at the price of one dollar.

Increases Sales

When Canadian Grocer representative inquired about this method of selling oranges the grocer replied: "Some time ago I bought some oranges, 252s, which I found to be of good quality, but on account of their size the customers seemed prejudiced against them. I was struck with the idea of selling them off by the peck and, calculating the cost, found that I could easily sell them at $1 a peck. I advertised them at this price, and found that this system proved very popular among my customers. I have sold as many as twenty-five cases of oranges in a week by this plan. On an average there are thirty-three oranges to a peck and for this quality of orange I know I am giving my customers a better price than they would get by buying them by the dozen. At the same time I am selling practically three times as many oranges, and so am able to buy my oranges now at a better price. When a grocer buys any commodity in a large quantity he usually gets a better price, and it follows he can offer a better price to his customers with a consequent bigger turnover.

Customers Pleased

"What is more, I have found that this system pleases my customers and they have now got into the habit of asking for oranges by the peck. I feel sure that I will be required to keep up this system and may carry it on with the larger sized oranges. When my sales on this line of fruit are so increased I can afford to sell at even a smaller profit. Another thing that has influenced me in this connection is that since I have adopted this method of selling oranges, I have not only made bigger sales but it appears that my customers are using more oranges. At any rate the demand for oranges has greatly increased and consequently my sales have increased.

"In certain American cities the plan of selling oranges by the peck is very popular," remarked Mr. Stewart, of the Peterson Fruit Co., of Montreal. "In fact, certain American exporters are strongly in favor of the adoption of the plan. They recognize that it increases the consumption of oranges since the public feel that the fruit is cheaper by buying it by the peck than by the dozen even though the price be the same. However, the grocer can afford to sell oranges cheaper when he is selling by the peck since his turnover cannot help but be greater." position we find greatly helps sales," Mr. McDonald added. "A refrigerator showcase is used for the display of cooked meats, and has been the means of stimulating sales to very gratifying extent. We also sell large quantities of fresh fruits and vegetables throughout the year. Display is always an important factor in their turnover, and we find that in keeping them in good condition, and where the people can readily see them, we sell them more quickly."

Are you selling ice cream in your grocery? The number of grocers who are doing it, and making a success of it, is rapidly increasing. Grocers are finding ice cream a profitable line. The experience of a number of merchants who have added it to their stocks of merchandise is told on this and succeeding pages. What the other fellow is doing with ice cream, thereby increasing his revenue, will be found interesting by the grocers who have not yet made the venture. Some are selling it only in the bricks while others have on their premises an ice cream parlor, a soda fountain, and all that an up-to-date ice cream establishment denotes.

Ice Cream Proves Profitable Venture

Sarnia Grocer Invests $500 in Soda Fountain Equipment, and in One Month the Complete Investment is Written off by the Net Profits—Average Daily Net Profit is $15.60

TO invest $500 in a certain piece of store equipment and have the amount of capital invested returned in full out of the net profits of that particular equipment in a trifle over one month sounds pretty good, doesn't it?

No doubt it also sounds like a fairy tale during these days of small profits in a retail grocery business, but, nevertheless, such was the gratifying result of the installation of a soda fountain and kindred equipment in the store of Robert Kirby, Sarnia, Ont. Sales of ice cream, sodas, sundaes, etc., over the fountain in the Kirby store average $65 daily during the summer months. The gross margin of profit on ice cream is 40 per cent. The cost of operating is 16 per cent., leaving a net profit of 24 per cent. or an average daily net profit of $15.60. This record shows that the complete investment was wiped out by the net profits of 32 days' business, even allowing 7½ per cent. interest on the investment.

Location Not a Factor

One might surmise that to conduct a soda fountain in a grocery store successfully, that store should be located in a down-town business section. Robert Kirby's store, however, is not so situated. It occupies a location well to the southern end of the city, but in close proximity to manufacturing concerns employing large office staffs. It is from this source that Mr. Kirby draws a great deal of his soda fountain business.

Previous to installing the soda fountain, Mr. Kirby sold ice cream in bulk and also in cones. A large portion of these sales were made to the nearby offices, and Mr. Kirby conceived the idea that a bigger and more profitable business could be built up on this line if it was gone after in the right way. This he set about to do, with what result, is clearly shown in the splendid record that opens this story.

Fountain Seven Feet Long

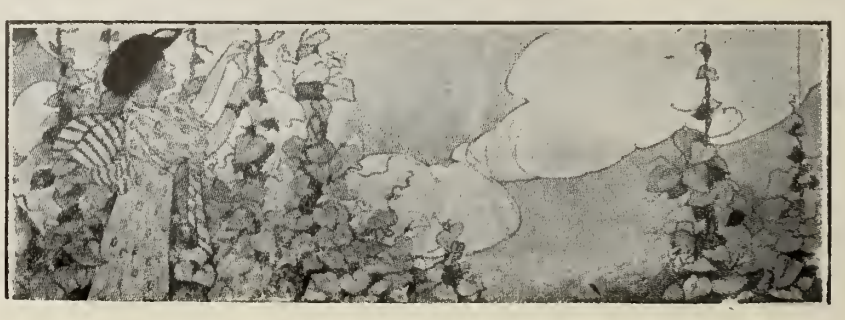
The soda fountain is located about half way down the store on one side. It is seven feet in length, made of white marble with silver trimmings and is complete with soda arm, syrup bottles, fruit jars, sink, etc. In front of the fountain are nine stools fastened to the floor. At the rear is a wall case with a large mirror. Shelves are arranged for displaying fresh fruits and to contain the glasses and dishes. This wall case has a cupboard base with glass doors, containing the surplus fountain supplies. In choosing this particular make of fountain, Mr. Kirby said, "I could have bought a soda fountain equipment at about $200 less than this one cost, but I figured that putting in the best is money well spent."

The fountain is in charge of a young woman who takes a special interest in the work, keeping it in order and serving the various dishes daintily and expeditiously. A printed menu is provided containing a list of twelve flavors of sodas and sundaes, varying in price from ten to twenty cents. Fresh fruits are always used as a special feature on the special dishes, but crushed preserved fruits are also used.

Helps Sales of Groceries

Not all the business is obtained from the source as mentioned above, but customers of the store invariably drop over to the fountain for a refreshing soda or dish of ice cream, after placing their order for groceries or while waiting their turn to be served. Then again, there are those who simply drop in for refreshment and becoming attracted by some particular line of merchandise that is on display frequently make a purchase. Thus it is seen that the fountain plays a double purpose — a means by which many extra sales are made.

Mr. Kirby does not serve the various dishes in the usual glass, but uses a sanitary cone-shaped paper dish that fits into a silver holder. This not only eliminates a lot of labor, such as washing dishes, but it proclaims sanitation and permits a greater profit. "Before using this system we served an ice cream soda in a twelve-ounce glass but now we only use the eight-ounce cone-shaped paper dish which not only gives us a better profit, but customers prefer it served that way best," remarked Mr. Kirby.



Ice Cream to Carry Home

"We have a good trade in ice cream to carry home," said Mr. Kirby. "That is where the fountain is valuable. The previous custom was to keep it in a cabinet, which, try as hard as possible, was always more or less a care. Then in repacking there was a great deal of work involved in draining off the water. With the fountain this is all done away with, because the fountain is connected with the drain, and all that is necessary is to turn a tap, allowing the water to run direct into the drain. Another point is, I find that the ice cream keeps much better in the fountain than it did in the tub or cabinet."

This season Mr. Kirby said he intends to sell only ice cream in bricks for home consumption and will not sell at all by the measure. The reason for this change is because he says he can make a larger profit on bricks than he can by selling by the measure. Another point, according to Mr. Kirby's line of figuring, is that in selling only bricks a lot of small, unprofitable sales are done away with, such as ten or fifteen cents' worth. "Of course we will continue to sell ice cream cones," remarked Mr. Kirby, "because they are a good profitable line."

Sales of Ice Cream in Month of July, $810

T. E. Reynolds, in Alliston, Ont., Makes a Gratifying Success With the Sale of Ice Cream in a Regular Grocery Store —Has Ice Cream Parlor at Rear

SELLING ice cream in grocery stores has become almost an established department—that is the selling of ice cream for home consumption. And why should it not be sold in grocery stores? It is acknowledged by authorities to be one of the best of foods, rich in fats and body building elements, and if for no other reason it rightly belongs to the grocery business.

The establishing of soda fountains and the fitting up of separate rooms for the serving of ice cream in connection with the grocery business is perhaps a new departure, but the fact is many merchants are already into this business and it is proving very profitable.

Turnover in July, 1920

During the month of July, 1920, actual sales of ice cream consumed in the ice cream parlor of T. E. Reynolds, Alliston, Ont., amounted to $810. Besides this several hundred gallons were sold to picnic parties and other outings put on by the townspeople. In the Reynolds store the rear is divided from the main part, and used as a room for serving ice cream, sodas, drinks, etc. It has twelve tables with accommodations for forty-eight people at one time. To one side and so arranged as to be accessible to either the room or the store is installed a soda fountain with all the necessary equipment. This is where all the fancy dishes and drinks are made up for patrons.

Only Open Saturday Nights

During the rush hours it takes three young women to look after this business, but at other times one or two girls look after the trade very nicely. One would naturally expect that it would be necessary to keep such a business open every evening, but in this instance it is not done except Saturday nights. Mr. Reynolds stated that no doubt he could do a great deal more business in ice cream if he kept open every night, but he felt that in respect to the grocery business it was only fair and just to other grocers to close up at the usual time of closing.

Brings People Into Store

Another feature in having such a room in which is served ice cream is that it tends to bring people into the store, who otherwise would not come. It is a good advertisement. Many new customers are added to the regular list and extra sales are made to people going in and out of the ice cream room. Mr. Reynolds recalled one instance of when he had a number of cases of honey in five-pound tins that were not moving very fast. He displayed them on a table in the centre of the store, so that people entering the ice cream room could not failed to see them. It resulted in the of twenty tins one afternoon, and in a short time the complete stock was sold.

A number of retail grocers are adding ice cream departments to their stores, many of them fitting them up in the manner here illustrated.

a Saturday. Charlottetown has a population of 12,000, which means an orange for every second man, woman and child in the city.

Recently Jenkins & Son arranged a window display of canned pineapple which was the direct means of disposing of fifty cases in three days.

At one end of the window is placed a large clock, which serves to draw attention to the goods on display as many people have formed the habit of looking there for the time of day.

Ice Cream Helps

J. M. Douglas, of Bradford, Ont., Finds it Profitable to Sell Ice Cream in His Store.

IT was a happy crowd sitting around the eight tables in the ice cream parlor of J. M. Douglas, grocer, in Bradford, Ont. All were chatting gayly and enjoying some especially refreshing concoction chosen from the long list of fancy dishes and put together by the neat young woman behind the soda fountain. "Fizzy" sodas that looked delightfully cooling, ice cream overflowing with fruits and nuts and bearing a name that only the soda dispenser could translate, lemonade with its bright red cherry and slice of lemon hanging over the side of the glass or a dish of just ice cream were all in evidence. These and other appetizing dishes with names that are real tempters were being consumed by this little crowd.

Off to one corner of the room was a table where two lads sat with their lassies who appeared to be the point of interest for all eyes, enjoying themselves, as young folks know how.

"Gee, that was a great June Bride," said Bob. "Let's have another."

"Sure that is a great line," said Jim. "What will you have this time, girls?"

"Nothing more, thanks," said the girls, gratefully.

The young people then zigzagged out of the room and passing through the store Jim paused at the candy counter and purchased a box of chocolates and Bob not to be outdone also bought a box which put him back just $1.25.

Builds Candy Trade

"Our ice cream room has practically built up our candy business," stated Mr. Douglas, to a representative of Canadian Grocer on this occasion. "I have observed this very keenly. When four young people visit the ice cream room, one of the young men will usually pay the bill and if they do not care for anything more to eat, passing out, the chap who with his girl has been the guest of the other fellow will invariably buy a box of chocolates. On a Saturday evening it is no uncommon occurrence to sell from twenty to twenty-five boxes of chocolates to young people coming from the ice cream room. These boxes of chocolates will run in price from $1.25 to $1.50 each. Of course other lines of candy are also sold. One Friday and Saturday we disposed of 120 pounds of a hard centre chocolate, in bulk, mostly in quarter and half pound lots.

"Then in the winter months when our ice cream room is not in operation I find the same young people dropping in almost every week for a box of chocolates, and they do not stick at the price as mostly they buy boxes costing $2 and higher."

SELLS FROM 20 TO 25 BOXES OF CANDY ON A SATURDAY NIGHT

"I have observed that when four young people visit our ice cream room, one of the young men will usually pay for the ice cream, and the young man with his girl, who have been the guests of the other fellow, will invariably buy a box of chocolates. On a Saturday evening it is no uncommon occurrence to sell from twenty to twenty-five boxes of chocolates in this way, ranging in price from $1.25 to $1.50 each. Of course other lines of candy are also sold. One Friday and Saturday we disposed of 120 pounds of a hard centre chocolate, in bulk, mostly in quarter and half pound lots." —J. M. Douglas, Bradford, Ont.

Chief Trade Is Groceries

Bradford, Ont., is a country town of 1,200 inhabitants, situated in a good farming district. Its business section is all on one street occupying about two city blocks in length. In the centre of one of these blocks is located the store of J. M. Douglas, whose principal business is groceries, although the next store to the grocery is used as a meat department. Between the two stores there is a connecting door which permits customers to go from one store to the other without the inconvenience of going out on the street.

It is in the rear of the grocery store where the ice cream room is located and people seeking refreshments must travel the length of the store to have their appetites appeased.

Sale of Candy

Five Months' Turnover Amounts to $2,700 With a Net Profit of $1,260.

The room is equipped with a regular soda fountain containing all the necessary paraphernalia, soda arm, syrup bottles, fruit bowls, ice cream storage cabinet, and in fact everything necessary to maintain efficient service.

Net Profit Over $1,200

The turnover of the ice cream room last season for the five months was $2,700. This amount, however, does not include the sale of ice cream to carry home, which averaged for the whole of last year nearly 100 pint bricks a week. Then there were several hundred gallons of ice cream sold to picnic parties and church affairs. Mr. Douglas figures that the gross margin on ice cream last year was $1,500, which placing the overhead at 16 per cent. shows a net profit of $1,260. This figure does not allow any depreciation on his investment, but say deducting a ten per cent. depreciation and interest on the investment at seven per cent. there still remains a handsome profit of a trifle over $1,000.

"There is a lot of hard work in handling an ice cream department in connection with groceries, but the profit is so good that one feels that he is not working for nothing," said Mr. Douglas.

Mr. Douglas is planning to extend his ice cream business this year. He intends to install near the front door another fountain where he will feature ice cream cones and ice cream to carry home.

For People in a Hurry

"With a fountain near the front door where it will be handy to people who are in a hurry," said Mr. Douglas, "I figure that we can nearly double our sales. You know there are some people who object to going to the back room for a brick of ice cream or waiting until someone goes and gets it. Then there is the cone trade that can be picked up, not only from the children, but older people as well, who would buy a cone if it was handy, while waiting for their goods."

One Thousand Cases of Soft Drinks in One Summer

A Suggestion for Increasing Sales This Coming Season—Seize Every Hot Day to Boost the Turnover in These Lines—Dawson & Co., Brampton, Ont., Find Beverages Profitable

ONE thousand cases of ginger ale and kindred soft drinks is the record of Dawson & Co., Brampton, Ont., during the summer months, last year. "We sold that number all with our regular orders," remarked Joseph Dawson to a representative of Canadian Grocer recently when discussing the matter. At the rear of Mr. Dawson's store is an ice cream parlor, run independently of the grocery. Mr. Dawson used to conduct the parlor himself, but last year he rented it to two ladies. In the ice cream parlor, a certain brand of ginger ale was sold, while in the grocery department just to the front, an entirely different brand was disposed of and sales to the amount already mentioned were the result. "No soft drinks were sold in the grocery department by the glass," stated Mr. Dawson. "All our sales are cases, smaller lots scarcely ever being sold. I used to order these soft drinks one hundred cases at a time. I have built up a big trade in these lines with my customers, and while I sell them the year around, in the summer months there is a continuous active inquiry for them. I have handled soft drinks now for some time past, and much of my success in the way of increasing sales has been due to the fact that I carry a popular line, and also because I constantly remind my trade that I carry them. Suggesting a case of ginger ale to a customer when giving her regular order will in most instances result in a sale. A particularly hot day is the opportune time to show a big increase in soft drink sales. Sales made on occasions such as a period of extreme heat means, as a general rule, repeat business.

Alberta Grocer Finds Ice Cream Profitable Line

J. J. Christopher, Wetaskiwin, Alta., is another grocer who is making an ice cream parlor a profitable department in his store. The principal business, of course, is groceries, but, on the other hand, Mr. Christopher states that the turnover in ice cream is one of the most gratifying features. He operates his ice cream parlor only through the late spring and summer months, but his sales in this period run into fairly large figures. The two departments work well together, according to the opinion of Mr. Christopher, and he considers that the ice cream business sells a lot of groceries for him. People coming in to have an ice cream or cool drink very frequently purchase groceries before leaving. In this way many sales are made.

Mr. Christopher has his ice cream parlor attractively fitted, and he has endeavored to make it one of the most popular places in Wetaskiwin. He has a soda fountain and a varied assortment of cooling and refreshing drinks can be served. He pays a good deal of attention to his ice cream department, and it has always been his endeavor to give the best possible service. He believes it is a valuable adjunct to a grocery store, not alone because it is profitable in itself but because it stimulates sales of groceries.

Increasing Sales of Summer Drinks

Forde Co., Brantford, Ont., Sell 1000 Cases of Soft Drinks Monthly During the Summer—Sell Ginger Ale and Soda Water With the Regular Family Orders—Other Beverages Are Also Big Sellers.

This Firm Believes That Soft Drinks Are Easily Handled and Are a Quick Turnover for the Dealer—Suggestion and Display, With Mention in Advertisement, Help to Boost Sales.

"OUR trade in soft drinks is a steady one all the year round, but of course we sell a great deal more in the summer months than at any other time," remarked Jackson Forde, of Forde Co., Market Street, Brantford, Ont., to a representative of Canadian Grocer recently. "Where our sales in the winter, spring and fall only amount to about 25 cases monthly, they total 100 and more cases in the warm weather. We have sold soft drinks now for a long time, and they are ordered regularly by our customers with the usual family orders."

One Hundred Cases Monthly

One hundred cases a month in the summer is pretty good selling of beverages for the average grocer, and it is evident that much can be done in the way of stimulating sales of these lines during the hot weather. Mr. Forde has sold ginger ale and soda water now for some years, and he believes that soft drinks are a profitable and easy line for the grocer to handle. In building a trade in these beverages, it is of prime importance, of course, to let the people know they are in stock.

"How did you get your customers ordering these lines?" Mr. Forde was asked.

"Well, of course we are regular advertisers in the daily paper here and from time to time we boost ginger ale and soda water," he replied. "We have a very large family trade, a great deal of which is carried on over the telephone. In first getting this business in soft drinks going we kept our clientele informed as to what we had to offer, suggesting a case of ginger ale or soda water along with the regular orders. Knowing we stocked these beverages they continued to order from us, with the result that we now have a very fair trade in these lines."

Feature in Advertisement

From the accompanying advertisement it will be seen that Mr. Forde features ginger ale and soda water in his daily newspaper insertion. He starts once the warm weather begins to increase sales in beverages by keeping them before the people in his daily advertisement and by having his staff talk them up to the people when giving their orders. He sometimes makes a window display of them. This, too, has been the means of attracting new business in ginger ale and soda water. Mr. Forde sells these lines all by the case, very little being disposed of in smaller lots. That there is a well-defined place in the stock of the grocery for soft drinks there is no doubt in the mind of Mr. Forde, and that his efforts in this regard have been rewarded with some degree of success, he is assured. He believes there is a good opportunity for the grocer to go after this business, and it is well worth while.

Sales of grape juice and such prepared drinks as lemonade and orangeade also are a feature in the summer months in the Forde stores. Grape juice is a big seller, constant effort being put behind it to keep it moving in the summer months. These lines are kept continually displayed in the hot weather, and a good deal of selling is done because of effective displays.

Solving the Accounting Problem

How the Management of a General Store in St. Hyacinthe, Que., Divides and Apportions Expenses to Each Department—Each Shows its Own Costs of Operation and Profits

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

ST. HYACINTHE, May 2.—In the town of St. Hyacinthe, Que., one of the largest grocery stores is operated in conjunction with a hardware business under the name of S. Bourgeois & Co., Ltd. While these two different businesses are under the same roof and under the same management, they are kept entirely separate as far as finances are concerned, and each shows its own costs of operation and profits just as accurately as if they were under entirely separate proprietorship.

A General Store Problem

In this system of management there lies the solution to a problem that faces many merchants who own general stores and who wish to place each department of their store on a basis where it will show its independent earnings. The store in question is under the management of J. A. Ostiguy. Perhaps the plan of this store is such as to make it easier to keep separate the two departments. The two taken together would make a large store, but a wall down the center two-thirds of the way to the back wall almost entirely separates the grocery from the hardware store. Each has separate entrances from the street. A space along the back wall just between the two stores is enclosed by a railing, and affords an office from which both departments can be seen. A balcony built over this main office makes a suitable place for the cashier's desk, and here the receipts of both departments are taken and all money is handled by overhead carriers.

Two Separate Staffs

There are nine men on the staff of the grocery department, and besides Mr. Ostiguy, the bookkeeper and the cashier no one else has any connection with both departments. In fact, as far as management goes they are the only connecting link between the grocery and the hardware departments.

There are numerous overhead expenses in operating a store such as this, which should be charged in proper proportions to each of the departments. There is the expense of heating the building, which this firm has arranged to be carried by each of the branches on a basis of floor space occupied by each. The idea is that if the grocery or hardware manager was renting a heated store he would have to pay for it according to the size of the store. Next on this list of sundry accounts comes the lighting bill. This is charged to each branch on a basis of lamps used in their respective sections.

Apportioning Telephone Costs

The telephone bill offers a more serious problem, with perhaps some room for discussion of the point. Every grocer will realize that there will be more calls every day to the grocery department than to the hardware department. However, some would claim that the resulting business would be greater through the calls to the hardware department since hardware orders over the telephone are generally orders of very fair size. One merchant to whom Canadian Grocer representative proposed this question expressed the opinion that the telephone expenses should be divided on a basis of resulting business or approximately on that basis. That is, if the hardware department got two thousand dollars' worth of business over the telephone in the month and the grocery department only one thousand dollars' worth, then the hardware manager should pay two-thirds of the telephone charges for that month or perhaps two-thirds of the charges for that year. Still another merchant, however differs from the foregoing ideas and suggests that the telephone charges should be paid by both departments on a basis of the number of calls received for each. To determine the proportions, the number of calls received for each branch in one week might be counted and taken as a basis for the charges for that year. However, in the store referred to in this article there is more than one telephone into the store. Each department pays for one line.

The Cost of Delivery

Perhaps the most difficult problem to solve is how to charge the delivery costs when there is only one vehicle between the two departments. In the case of S. Bourgeois & Co., Ltd., there are two wagons on the delivery system and one serves each department, is paid for by that department and is as independent of the other as if it belonged to another firm. If there are any repairs to one of them the expense is charged to the branch to which the wagon belongs. The feed and upkeep of the horses is divided between the departments. Naturally the salary of the driver is paid by the branch for which he works.

Many general stores, or what might be termed duplex stores, have only one wagon or car and therefore if the owne wishes to keep his business on a basi where he can analyze its progress h must charge the departments with th portion of the cost of delivery in rati to the service rendered. This will be per haps the most complicated task in a counting that he is called upon to face.

SELLS ORANGES BY THE BUCKE

G. H. Knowles, Newmarket, Ont., b lieves it is a good plan to sell orange and especialy the smaller sizes by th bucket. Recently he filled a windo with oranges, that is they were n piled in even rows but were thrown i helter skelter. An ordinary patent pa was then filled and placed in the centr of the window. A card announced th "A Bucket of Oranges for $1" drew th atention of the passerby, which resulte in sales of oranges being greatly au mented. In using a plan of this cha acter, Mr. Knowles stated that he a ways counted the number of orange that went into the bucket because by s doing he was able to figure the prof more easily.

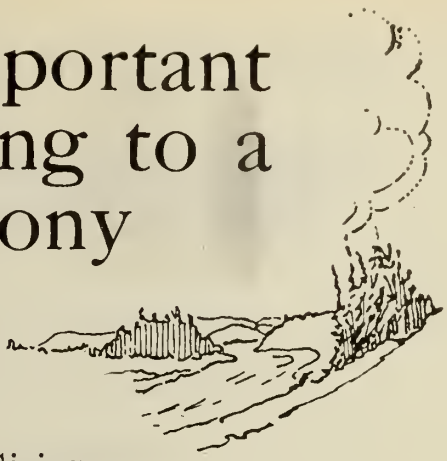
Good Equipment Means Increased Business

"Equipment that facilitates service means increased business," remarked R. Conn, manager of the Pincher Creek Providers' Store, at Pincher Creek, Alberta, to a representative of Canadian Grocer. The Pincher Creek Providers' Store is carrying on a large trade, and the arrangement of the store is such as to make for convenience and ease in the handling of a large number of customers in the quickest possible time. "Apart altogether from the fine appearance that modern fixtures and equipment give a grocery store, the merchant should not lose sight of their importance in building his business," added Mr. Conn. "The attractive store will, of course, get business all the time, but as an investment on which the merchant is realizing continuously, proper and convenient equipment will pay him returns."

From the accompanying photograph of a portion of this store, it will be readily seen that patented bins are in use, and the counter is of the most modern type. Bins of this kind, Mr. Conn told Canadian Grocer representative, not only keep goods in first-class condition, but actually saved goods for the firm. From these patented bins, service to the customer at the counter is rendered easy and quick. Scales, too, are also placed with the idea of facilitating service.

The Pincher Creek Producers' Co., as well as doing a large business in general groceries, has built up a very gratifying trade in high-grade confectionery. A silent salesman showing both box and bulk chocolates is prominently placed in the store, and this showcase is the means of selling a lot of candy. The value of display is fully realized by the management, and interior as well as window displays are used with good effect.

Service the Important Factor in Catering to a Summer Colony



C. E. Sheppard, at Crystal Beach, on Lake Erie, Has Made An Exhaustive Study of the problem, Evolving Many Devices in the Way of Giving Service and Increasing Sales—Sales of Small Assortments of Fresh Fruits at Special Prices Appeal to the Motorists.

CATERING to tourist and summer resort trade has been the chief factor in building the business of C. E. Sheppard, at Crystal Beach, Ont., a popular summer resort on Lake Erie. Mr. Sheppard has made an exhaustive study of summer resort business, and at Crystal Beach where there is a summer population of around twenty thousand he has made the most of his opportunity to build up a business the annual turnover of which runs into large figures. During the winter months Mr. Sheppard manages a similar store to the one at Crystal Beach, at St. Petersburgh, Fla., but an an even more extensive scale. Thus his experience in summer resort business covers a considerable period, during which time he has developed new ideas that have meant increased sales and the betterment of his service to his patrons.

The Value of Display

Mr. Sheppard is a firm believer in the value of display, and one is impressed with this fact immediately on entering the store. The customer is really among the stock before he or she realizes it, so splendidly has Mr. Sheppard arranged it. His display runs from the very edge of the sidewalk to one-third the depth of his store.

His is what is known as an open front store, and in the summer months permits of a fine array of seasonable merchandise. The customer is really into the store before he realizes it, and from the front has a full view of the goods. On the ground floor are carried all kinds of groceries, and particular attention is given to those lines that make special appeal to a summer resort colony—foods that are quickly and easily prepared, in addition to being tempting to the average person in the hot weather. Getting the goods out where people can see them has always been a big feature with Mr. Sheppard, and making attractive displays he always finds induces people to buy things that they did not intend to buy, possibly, when they first came into the store. Summer resort people are usually out to buy, and if the goods are presented to them in the right way, they will purchase them.

The entire front of Mr. Sheppard's store is devoted to fruits and vegetables. The imported as well as the domestic varieties are in stock all the time, and special attention is given to these lines. Fruits and vegetables are bought daily on the Buffalo market, Mr. Sheppard keeping a buyer there each day, and thus customers are always assured of being able to secure fresh fruits and vegetables in first-class condition at the Sheppard store.

As one enters the store proper, on the right are serving counters for groceries, and on the left are displayed confectionery lines in glass cases. On the first floor Mr. Sheppard conducts a model bakery, with an output of 500 loaves of bread per day, in addition to pies, cakes, etc. These are all disposed of in the store, and sales of the same are heavy. The fact that the daily production is sold each day assures the people of Crystal Beach fresh supplies at all times. In fact, it is one of the much appreciated services at the resort, Mr. Sheppard told the Canadian Grocer representative. People away for the summer, and on holidays, are anxious to reduce work to a minimum, and this model bakery provides an accommodation that the housewife readily takes advantage of.

At the back of the store an excellent assortment of fresh and cooked meats is held in an entirely screened in department. Customers are not permitted within the screened area, but make their selections through the screens. Fancy biscuits are displayed in the centre of the store and in such a way as cannot fail to attract the customer.

Saving Clerks' Time

A feature of this store is the fact that all payments are made at the office, thereby saving clerks' time making change. The space between the office and the meat section is used for showing goods. Two counters here provide ample room. These counters are frequently changed and serve to offer many suggestions to the customers in a summer colony.

Back of the store is a large stock room with a cement floor which helps to keep the air of the store itself cooler, as it opens directly off it. A specially arranged ventilating system permits a constant circulation of fresh air, and flies are practically an unknown quan-

Advertising is a Good Investment

Fawthrop Bros., Cornwall, Ont., Are Consistent Advertisers in Their Town Paper, Using Considerable Space All the Time—Has Ceased to Be an Experiment and Now Shows Profitable Returns.

IN the 1917 Fall Number of Canadian Grocer an article dealt at length with the history of the grocery business of Fawthrop Brothers, Cornwall, Ontario, showing how A. Fawthrop by perseverance and indomitable courage built up a business from a start with a capital of $150 to a turnover of $100,000 a year. That article pointed out the many handicaps that Mr. Fawthrop had to overcome in starting such a business, where not only a limited capital, but poor health as well had to be taken into consideration. That article was written three years ago. Since then the business has doubled itself and to-day the turnover is quoted over $200,000 per year. Still certain handicaps face Mr. Fawthrop and his sons, such as the inability to get large enough quarters for their speedily growing business.

Watching Minor Details

When a Canadian Grocer representative again called on Mr. Fawthrop in the fall, he found the elderly gentleman in the basement of his store carefully packing and sorting onions before putting them away for the winter trade. "My sons are able now to take charge of the business, but I find my pleasure and occupation in the routine work, in looking after such little details as picking over the onions," remarked Mr. Fawthrop. "By this careful attention I have always found that many leakages in profits in the grocery business can be stopped and it has been my work to make the cents mount up to dollars, until to-day my business has reached this stage in spite of the many handicaps that faced me when I started.

"Although we have overcome many of the difficulties that faced us in the first place, new ones arise with the increasing and spreading business. One of these, which perhaps will be the most difficult to solve, is analysing our business so that we will know just how each of the different lines we carry is paying. At the present time we are carrying groceries, drygoods and hardware lines under the one account. I realize that in order to have my business on a basis so that it can be analysed, these things must be separated and that problem now faces us. It is a problem that faces, or at least should face, every grocer whose business is developing rapidly and who desires to know just where the little inefficiencies of the business occur.

Needs Economical Appliances

"We are so handicapped by our limited space that we cannot have the fixtures and the little time and money savers that we require so much. There was a time when we could not afford these things, but now, since our business has outgrown our accommodation, we have not the room for them, although we can afford to buy them. When one begins to make a study of the business and sees the points where leakages occur so easily, it is a wonder that in the early days of the business when all meat had to be cut by a hand-knife that the business was made to pay at all, especially when you take into consideration how small the turnover of the business then was."

It Pays to Advertise

This growing firm evidently believes that it pays to advertise. Every Thursday a full-page advertisement appears in the Cornwall Standard for Fawthrop Bros.' general store. The old motto of the firm appears at the head of the page, "Satisfaction Guaranteed." In the interview given by Mr. Fawthrop to Canadian Grocer representative three years ago this was given as the secret of the success of the big undertaking, and to-day it is emphasized just as much as ever. As Mr. Fawthrop's eldest son, who has now taken over the management of the business, says, "It is one thing to advertise such a motto, but it is another thing to live up to it. It does not take long for a customer to find out whether it is an advertisement or a motto. If it is followed conscientiously, it cannot fail to lead to success. It guarantees the trade for you, and it does not make much difference how prices go, the man who is doing the business is safe. He can afford to follow the market closer than the man whose stock is not turning over so rapidly. In this connection we have lately found a rather peculiar situation. For the last two years people have been wishing for prices to decline. When the market was rising they bought freely, and now when the decline comes they refrain from buying. It will only require the slightest sign of another rise in prices to stimulate buying once more. It is at a time like this that the confidence of the customers must not be abused. If a grocer

ALWAYS GET RESULTS FROM ADVERTISING

"We try to keep our motto, 'Satisfaction guaranteed,' before the public, to instill into the minds of those who buy that our ambition is 'service to the community.' This is summed up in the words of our advertisement. We believe that it is the only true and satisfactory basis on which to build a business. We know that we grow and prosper only as we serve, and therefore we must make it our effort to meet our community's needs. We have found the response in the way of a great development during twenty-two years of business.

"We feel that it is a real service to carry the assortment we carry for our people, to study continually their requirements, new markets, new ideas and the general trend of market conditions throughout the country. Our aim is quick turnovers, small profits and small losses in bad debts.

"We believe that establishing a good name for fair dealing and good merchandising at a reasonable profit, with community service as our calling, is the only true way to increase our business.

"We believe in advertising, and while we fight shy of the sensational, we always have a good response. Advertising has been profitable to us. It has ceased to be an experiment. It is now an investment."—A. Fawthrop, Cornwall, to Canadian Grocer.

has won the trust of those who deal with him he has a great advantage over all his competitors. At a time like this it is imperative that the grocer shall keep in intimate touch with market conditions. When he is sure of these conditions he is then able to advise intelligently as to the opportune time to buy. Many good business chances are lost because a grocer either does not know certain trends of the market, or else he has not the confidence of his customers. For this reason we have tried our very best to live up to our motto, "Satisfaction Guaranteed," so that we will not sacrifice the privilege that is ours of advising our patrons.

Advertising Always Pays

"We have carried out this idea in our advertising. We try to keep our motto before the public, to instill into the minds of all those who buy that our ambition is Service to the Community. This is summed up in the words of our advertising. We believe that this is the only true and satisfactory basis on which to build a business. We know that we grow and prosper only as we serve, and, therefore, we must make it our effort to meet our community's needs. We have consequently found a response in the form of a great development during our twenty-two years of business.

"We feel, sincerely, that it is a real service to carry the assortment we carry for our people; to study, continually, needs and desires, new markets, new ideas and the general trend of the market conditions throughout the country. Our aim is quick turnovers, small profits and small losses in bad debts.

"We believe that establishing a good name for fair dealing and good merchandising at a reasonable profit, with community service as our calling, is the only true way to increase our business.

"We believe in advertising in our local papers, and while we fight shy of anything sensational, we always have a good response from our advertising. This is part of a full page advertisement we ran in our local paper," continued Mr. Fawthrop. "This sums up our policy as well as showing just what advertising we do. We feel that when we continually keep our policy before the public it cannot help but have its effect, especially in view of the fact that we back it up with a sincere effort to serve. In fact this advertising has proved to be profitable. It has ceased to be an experiment—it is now an investment. Not only does our advertising pay, but we have found that the advertising of the manufacturers to us has been profitable to our business in many cases, so that if our efforts for publicity fail it is surely the ineffectiveness of our appeal. I am glad to say, however, that our advertising has shown results."

Better Times for the Grocer

In reviewing the business of the last few years with its advantages and its disadvantages, Mr. Fawthrop said: "There is no doubt that the grocer had splendid opportunities during the last two years of the war. In the first place almost anything was a good buy. Only a very careless man could make a mistake. The market was continually on the advance and the people were buying freely. Money, too, was moving freely and the public were inclined to be extravagant. To-day the tables have changed and in many cases it is hard to reconstruct business policies. Some have become prodigal in their buying since their experience of the abnormal times and now when the time comes to settle down to economy and study of market conditions they are at a loss. The change came very quickly and the market became panicky. The trouble with the public is that when the market begins to decline they not only buy in very small quantities, but they even skimp themselves, forgetting that by so doing they are only crippling commerce and consequently injuring the hand that feeds them. It is surely a time for economy, but hardly to the extent where it cripples business. It is my honest opinion, however, that these conditions will not last long and as soon as the market settles again the demand will come back to normal. The grocer is perhaps in a better condition than most merchants since his stock turns over more quickly and has not been so severely affected by the craze for exaggerated economy. Since we carry a general line, including dry goods and footwear, I can speak knowingly about that business and make comparisons. I firmly believe that better times are not far ahead in the business world and that the grocer will be the first to be away in the race since he is not handicapped by stock that has been very slow in its turnover and abnormally high in its prices."

Mr. Fawthrop regrets their inability to enlarge their store proportionately to the increased trade.

The Idea of Service to Our Community

We believe that this is the only true and satisfactory basis on which to build a business. We know that we grow and prosper only as we serve, and, therefore, we must make it our effort to meet our community's needs. We have, consequently, found a response in the form of a great development during our 22 years of business.

We feel, sincerely, that it is a real service to carry the assortment that we carry for our people, to study, continually, our community needs and desires, new markets, new ideas, and the trend of conditions generally over the country.

Our aim is quick turnovers, small profits, small losses in bad debts.

We believe that establishing a good name for fair dealing, and good merchandise at a reasonable profit, with community service to our calling, is the only true way of increasingly building up a substantial business.

"Display Will Sell Goods all the Time"

French & Co., London, Ont., Believe That Goods Well Displayed Will Practically Sell Themselves—Ten Kegs of Grapes Are Sold in One Day as a Result of Showing in the Window

THE usual custom in the old store of French & Co., London, Ont., was to pile huge quantities of fruits in front of the windows, right out on the street. But in planning the new store they decided to carry out their idea of "everything under glass" to the very limit. The front, as seen in the illustration, is of a double deck nature, the first floor being about six inches from the pavement and the next one at a height of four feet, making it as nearly as possible to the proper level of the passer-by. In this way goods on display will catch the eye and arrest the attention of the transient customer.

Window displays are a feature of the French store, and are looked after by Mr. French, sr., who is an artist at the business of window dressing. The photo reproduced was taken during the Easter season and is a fair sample of the displays in the French store.

Ten Kegs of Grapes in a Day

Fancy baskets are used to good advantage for display purposes when it is the desire to show a number of different kinds of fruits. Frequently, however, a massed display of one line is arranged. For instance, one window was devoted wholly to grapes. Three barrels of grapes were tipped up at the rear of the window and the contents spilled all over the floor of the window, creating an interest that resulted in ten kegs being sold during one day. Another time a window was devoted to oranges, with a few fancy baskets of grapes and walnuts set around which made an artistic arrangement.

A recent display was one composed of grapefruit, oranges, pineapples and lettuce. A pyramid of grapefruit about two and one-half feet square at the base was arranged in the centre of the window, and built up to a height of about two feet. On top of the pile of grapefruit were placed pineapples. At the rear of the window, one on each side of the grapefruit, were similar piles of oranges. At the base of the pyramids and covering the floor of the window was placed leaf lettuce. This was an attractive display and was the means of boosting the turnover of these lines.

French & Co. consider the windows the best advertisement, and no other method of advertising is used. "Goods well displayed will practically sell themselves," said Mr. French.

The inviting interior of the new store of French & Co., London, Ont., illustrating their idea of everything under glass.

"Everything Under Glass" in This Store

The New Store of French & Co., London, Ont., Represents a High Standard of Sanitation and Cleanliness, With All Goods Shown Under Glass, Permitting Attractive and Tempting Displays.

"EVERYTHING under glass" was the aim of French & Co., London, Ont., in planning the layout and equipment of their new store which they opened at the beginning of the year. The store is a model of cleanliness and sanitation, with the white tile floor and vast array of plate glass cases under which are displayed every line of merchandise that is to be found in a store specializing in fruits and groceries.

On the right upon entering, one encounters a long row of display tables extending nearly the full length of the store. These tables are topped with plate glass cases where are temptingly displayed oranges, grapefruit, lemons, figs, pineapples and other fresh and dried fruits. These cases are built with an open back that makes it easy for selling purposes but at the same time are away from meddlesome fingers that are the bane of all merchants handling fresh fruits.

Summer Drinks Shown

At the rear of these cases are shelves displaying a large variety of grape juice and other summer drinks of which the firm enjoy an extensive sale. About half way down the store and on the same side is a large wall case for the purpose of displaying fancy baskets. This is one of the firm's specialties, the filling of fancy baskets with fruits. It is not in the mere filling of the baskets that French & Co. has made a reputation but it is the manner in which they are filled. Each basket is studied and filled to get the most artistic effect that is sure to bring gladness to the recipient, whether that person is an invalid, a mother or just "his best girl."

In connection with the fancy baskets, and close by the case containing them, is placed a writing desk and chair with all the appointments, pen and ink, also cards enclosed in envelopes. This is for the free use of customers purchasing baskets of fruit or other articles to which they wish to attach a card. It is just another service that tends to make the store different and more interesting to the public.

Occupying nearly the entire width of the store at the rear is installed a large refrigerator with a glass front similar to a show window and in which is always an attractive display of fresh fruits. It is also used for the storing of surplus supplies.

On the other side of the store is the grocery department. French & Co., although not handling such bulk lines as cereals and potatoes (except new imported potatoes), nevertheless have a large clientele for groceries, and except

Only One Phase of Retail Merchandising

G. R. Wetmore, Proprietor of a Chain of Cash and Carry Stores in St. Johns, N.B., Discusses the Cash and Carry Way of Doing Business With Canadian Grocer—Insists on Cash All the Time.

By Staff Correspondent

"Perhaps the fairest light in which to place the genuine 'cash and carry' store is that it is meant to appeal to a distinct element in the community. This element is composed of a greater or less number of people who have the ability and the disposition together to pay cash for what they buy, and who are willing at the same time to deny themselves some of the convenience and service that others demand in procuring what they desire. Actually applied the cash and carry idea eliminates what are to most grocers the two biggest items of expense, but it also imposes upon the customer more self-service by making it necessary to carry home his own purchases or to pay for their delivery. It also denies him the privilege of making payments more or less at his own convenience. In consideration of the economies it is possible to effect by means of the cash and carry idea, it is clear that the operator of such a store should be able to sell his goods at somewhat lower prices than can merchants who have heavier overhead expenses. People are not going to pay cash and carry goods home unless they can save money by doing so."—G. R. Wetmore's idea of the cash and carry store.

AMHERST, N.S,—While not exactly alone in their field, the six retail grocery stores of G. R. Wetmore are among the chief examples of "Cash and Carry" merchandising in St. John, N.B. Several other merchants have adopted the idea, some nominally, a few actually, but in no other case does more than one store operate on this basis under one name. The Wetmore chain of groceries was opened a little more than a year ago, and according to Mr. Wetmore's statement to Canadian Grocer these stores have more than come up to his expectations in the way of public patronage and all round success. In view of the differences of opinion which exists in trade circles concerning the significance and legitimate status of this method of distributing goods it may be of some value to readers of this paper to consider the plan of operation of this chain of stores.

Only One Phase of Merchandising

Mr. Wetmore disclaims any intention, hope, or desire now, or in the past, to corral all the retail grocery business in St. John. In discussing his business with Canadian Grocer he made it clear he recognized the fact that his scheme of selling represented but one phase of retail merchandising, that other merchants doing business on another basis tendered a public service which he could not render, and that the fundamental difference between the two ways of doing business would always assure other grocers a share of business, unless cash trading should in time become the universal practice. Such a development he does not look for, nor does anyone else at all acquainted with the force of economic laws.

Appeals to Distinct Element

Perhaps the fairest light in which to place the genuine "cash and carry" store is that it is meant to, he intimated, and does appeal to a distinct element in the community. This element is composed of a greater or less number of people who have the ability and the disposition together to pay cash for what they buy, and who are willing at the same time to deny themselves some of the convenience and service that others demand in procuring what they desire. This is Mr. Wetmore's conception of the scheme, and it may be said he is equally aware of its limitations and of the advantages and attractions of the form of retailing in which more service is accorded customers in the way of convenient credits and delivery of purchased goods. Actually applied, he states, the "Cash and Carry" idea eliminates what are to most grocers the two biggest items of expense, but it also imposes upon the customer more self-service by making it necessary to carry home his own purchases or to pay for their delivery. It also denies him the privilege of making payments more or less at his own convenience. In consideration of the economies it is possible to effect by means of the cash and carry idea, it is clear that the operator of such a store should be able to sell his goods at somewhat lower prices than can merchants who shoulder heavier overhead expenses, and as a matter of business policy to compensate customers for the disadvantages they accept in paying for goods as they get them, and making their own deliveries, lower prices are a necessity in the cash-and-carry store. In other words, people are not going to pay cash and carry goods home unless they can save money by doing so. This, in outline, is Mr. Wetmore's view of the cash-and-carry scheme.

Cash and Cash Only

In the Wetmore stores the cash-and-carry principle is put into actual practice. He changes nothing. For his own family requirements, even, he pays cash. No hard luck story can get five cents worth of goods from him on credit. He does sometimes let goods go without getting cash for them. But such goods are given away—and forgotten. Anyone who can convince Mr. Wetmore that he or she is in dire need of eatables can get enough from him to satisfy his or her immediate wants, but in every case the would-be customer is told that the transaction is not a sale but a gift, and that payment positively will not be accepted. Clerks have explicit instructions not to take money from anyone who has received goods without paying for them. Seldom does money have to be refused from such a person, as people who get goods in this manner hardly ever come back, but when occasion is found to make the refusal, it also affords the opportunity of emphasizing the fact that the store does business for cash, and cash only. Under such circumstances, no one ever asks twice for credit.

Absolutely No Deliveries

With equal rigidness the "carry" part of the scheme is carried out. No goods are delivered to anybody, under any circumstances. Trade from good cash customers has been refused because they wanted stuff delivered. Mr. Wetmore says he can not afford to maintain any kind of delivery, without revising his system of doing business to include a charge for such service, which he is determined not to do, and that although by straining a point in exceptional cases he might derive some profit by making a delivery now and then, he can not see the wisdom of endangering the effectiveness of the principle upon which he is running his business by even in one instance breaking the rule he has adopted. So his customers carry home everything they buy in his stores. Nothing that a customer can not carry home is stocked in any store. Telephone service for the stores was decided against at the beginning largely because Mr. Wetmore feared people would use the telephone to ask for deliveries which he could not make and would take offence at his refusal. At the Cobourg store, where his office is located, a telephone was installed for his personal use, but this has been so much the source of just the trouble he feared, that he intends to have it removed.

Idea Not to Beat Competitors

Contrary to the rather general impression that has grown up concerning the object of the cash-and-carry store, Mr. Wetmore has not been carried away with the idea that the first thing he must do is to beat the other fellow in the matter of low prices. As a general thing, he says, his prices are probably lower than other merchants', and in some cases, when for special reasons he deems it good business to "slash" a little he does so. But that is a business expedient, common to all lines of trade. His rule is not to sell for less than his competitors, but to sell as low as he can after putting on the margin he has decided upon as necessary to make the profit he requires. This rule sometimes fixes his selling prices at a higher figure than an article can be bought for from another merchant who will deliver it. This circumstance does not necessarily cause him to take action in the matter, and unless market conditions affecting the article warrant a reduction in his price, Mr. Wetmore says he makes no attempt to meet the competitive price.

Display is Important

Besides the distinctive features of the Wetmore business, these chain stores illustrate ordinary good merchandising methods. Advertising does not figure in the business at all, because Mr. Wetmore is of the opinion that no form of advertising could develop business which the number and location of his stores, together with their displays, and his selling policy, does not create. Display of goods in windows, and throughout each store, is a strong point. Window displays are frequently changed. Stock, floors and fixtures are kept scrupulously clean. Refuse is not allowed to accumulate, even in the back shop of any store. Stock is neatly arranged in sections, each containing all of one class of goods, so that any article may be easily found as soon as a clerk becomes acquainted with the location of the comparatively few sections. Standard, reputable goods, with only two grades in each line, are carried in each store and practically the same stock is carried in each store. All goods are price marked in plain figures. Goods are carefully weighed and measured and customers get neither more nor less than they pay for.

Lad's Ambition Realized

To give a flavor of romance to the story of the Wetmore chain stores, one might expect to go back to the King's county home of George Wetmore some thirty odd years ago, and there find a country lad who dreamed of some day becoming a merchant prince, or perhaps a grocery king. What one would find in so journeying back would be the country lad, as expected, but that lad's ambition then was to some day reach the dignity and importance of a clerk in a grocery store. On his visits to St. John he spent all the time he could in the store where his parents traded and upon the urbane, white-sleeved clerks, who tied up parcels and made out accounts, he looked with awe. No higher estate than they occupied could be desirable to him. In time he achieved his childhood ambition, and even became a partner in a country store business. Then he went to the States, where he became a traveller for a wholesale grocery house. Some fifteen years ago Mr. Wetmore returned to St. John and eventually became sales manager for one of the big wholesale houses there. Later he took charge of the city sales of another important wholesale house in St. John. He says he never tried to sell an article he did not believe in and never worked for a concern that could not inspire his faith. Faith in the goods he sells and in the merchandising scheme he has inaugurated is undoubtedly a big factor in Mr. Wetmore's present success.

SERVICE THE IMPORTANT FACTOR

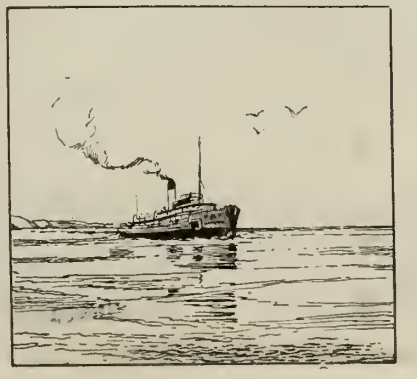
tity in the Sheppard store. Mr. Sheppard claims that the "open front" store has a tendency to reduce fly troubles to a minimum. In the South, he states, screens and poor ventilation are looked upon as a means of encouraging the fly to remain within, rather than keep him out. However, in this modern summer store the fly has little chance, as all goods which might be contaminated by them are under cover.

Special Devices Increase Sales

Special devices used to stimulate sales are novel. One that might be mentioned is the ticketing of small quantities of fruit at special prices. These appeal to the casual visitor, the motorist, and the sale of them is on a large scale, the weekly turnover being on an average five hundred dollars. Concentrating selling effort on a specially blended coffee has resulted in the sale of as much as a ton a month. Quality is important in this store, and only goods of a reputable make are sold.



A staff of fifteen is employed. Many have been with Mr. Sheppard for years. In fact some are brought from the St. Petersburgh store in Florida, when the winter trade is over there. As an inducement to some permanency of service, employees receive a bonus of 10 per cent. of their salary, if they remain with Mr. Sheppard for the season.

Must Study Goods

In order that the clerks may be fully conversant with the merits of the goods they sell, each individual is expected to prepare a paper once a week upon the growth, manufacture, quality and selling points of articles carried in stock. These papers are read and discussed by the selling force and have proved of good advantage in familiarizing the salesmen with the goods they are required to sell. It also establishes the confidence of the public in the store.

for the lines mentioned can supply almost any line of merchandise found in the regular grocery store. They specialize on high-grade goods and in every instance quality has first place.

But the feature of the store is the handling of fresh fruits and early spring vegetables. To give some idea of the quantities sold it might be mentioned that recently sales of Southern strawberries ran up to 500 boxes on a Saturday even at the present high price. In other years when the Canadian product arrives it has been the usual custom to average 2,000 boxes of strawberries a day during the entire season. Sales in other small fruits are in the same proportion.

Buy Bananas in Green State

French & Co. usually buy bananas in car lots in the green state. A specially constructed ripening room is situated in the basement. This room is also used for the purpose of ripening pineapples, being equipped with heating apparatus and with the aid of a thermometer the room is kept at just the right degree of temperature.

In the matter of sales on green vegetables, ten cases of celery, 40 dozen head of lettuce, 15 dozen sweet peppers and quantities of green onions and radishes are considered a fair Saturday's selling during the early spring season.

Interior Displays and Attractive Layout of Stock are Effective Means of Aiding Selling Force

Grocery Department in Robinson & Co.'s Store in Winnipeg, Attracts Attention and Brings Business Because of Its Fine Arrangement—All Stock is Shown With a View to Increasing Sales—In Nine Cases Out of Ten Display Sells an Article

By Western Correspondent Canadian Grocer

WINNIPEG, May 4.—Arranged to permit of the greatest display of goods to the best possible advantage, the grocery department of Robinson & Co., Ltd., on Main Street, this city, represents an attractive section of this departmental store. The department extends the entire length of the building. "A well lighted store makes work a pleasure. customers pleased, and attracts trade," Manager H. Kitchen told the Western representative of Canadian Grocer. With this end in view, large electric lights are arranged at regular intervals to provide the best illumination.

Display Always Sells

"Goods well displayed are half sold," is an old saying, but it is nevertheless not lost sight of in the store of Robinson & Co. "We contend," the manager stated, "that goods should be properly displayed and priced, so that each customer may easily and readily see both the article and the price. In nine cases out of ten a display sells an article. The purchase of this particular line very often leads to the purchase of other things. By first creating the interest of the buyer in some display very frequently it not only results in the special product on display being sold, but also the sale of other foodstuffs."

For Showing Small Lines

The entire department represents display at its best. On the grocery counter itself baskets are used for the showing of small package goods such as jelly powders. These baskets, of course, are constantly changed, and being always on the counter result in increased sales. The orderly, convenient arrangement in this department strikes one very forcibly. The general cleanliness of all the stock appeals to the customer. Every line of goods bears a price ticket, and this facilitates the placing of orders.

The Provision Department

A feature of the store is the splendid provision department. Tempting displays are made here and result in greatly increased sales. Marble counters with glass fronts make for splendid displays of cooked meats and hams. The newest refrigeration preserves all these lines in the best possible condition. In this section each salesman wears a spotless white coat, the whole tone being one of absolute cleanliness and sanitation. Bulk pickles are displayed in white bowls, and ticketed with name and price. The counter and showcases at the rear of the department are devoted chiefly to imported and domestic cheese. Almost every variety of cheese is here shown. It is a very tempting display, and Mr. Kitchen stated that it meant a great deal in maintaining sales of cheese at gratifying levels.

Candy Sales Increasing

Many confectionery lines are also carried in the Robinson grocery. There are three sections in the centre of the store. The first one is devoted to an attractive layout of wedding cakes, pastry, cakes, pies, also cake trimmings for special occasions. Table decorations are also given prominence. Glass vases containings flowers, on the showcases, add beauty to the display. The second section is for coffees, teas and cocoas. A coffee grinder is here in constant use, and fresh coffee is ground as the cus-

Display is important in the grocery department of Robinson & Co., Ltd., at Winnipeg—the attractive arrangement of the stock means much in the way of increased sales.

Display Increases Sales of Housecleaning Lines

With the idea of increasing sales of housecleaning lines, Merritt & Beeton, grocers in Vancouver, had a striking display. The accompanying photograph represents a unique arrangement of these lines.

A neat little story and a half house was constructed from an orange box, and the roof of the house as well as of the verandah was covered with packets of blueing. The floor of the verandah was tiled with soap and the pillars were bars of castile, the chimneys being small bars of hand soap. A placid lake on which two swans were resting was made with a mirror and the surrounding paths were of laundry starch. The vivid green of the lawn was achieved with the use of a green sweeping compound. Gardens of real earth, on either side of the house, were planted with flowers and vegetables, as was plainly indicated by the seed packages raised on split sticks in the approved manner. Two pyramids of cleansing powder and a few brooms and oil mops completed a very attractive and seasonable window.

tomer asks for it. The aroma of coffee is always present, and the management believes it stimulates sales. The third section is used for candies and fancy biscuits. "We sell a lot of candy," Mr. Kitchen remarked. "We have been giving special effort to the selling of our candy," he added. "We want the people to know that candy of the best grades can be obtained in the grocery. Our sales of high-grade box candy are showing a steady increase. Small confections too, such as nut bars, are also ready sellers. For our better grade candy we have endeavored to secure a really first-class article, and have directed selling effort to it, with the idea of selling it above all others."

Fruits a Good Leader

Fruit and vegetables constitute a big sale in the Robinson store. Special facilities, too, for showing them to advantage are also provided. According to Mr. Kitchen, building a reputation for good fruit is one of the best recommendations that a store can have. It proves effective in not only increasing the sales of fruits, but also brings business in other lines. A good display of fruit creates the buying spirit in people quicker than anything else, Mr. Kitchen believes. A clever arrangement of fruits will get them every time.

Table Displays Sell

Tables for the purpose of display are also used in the aisles. Specials are shown in this way. Lines that are advertised at special prices are always sold from these tables.

Quality, service and fair dealing are the objects of this firm in catering to the public. It has been on these principles that an extensive business has been built.

French Shelled Walnuts Advancing

Major F. G. Gill, D.S.O., of Gill and Duffus, London, England, on Visit to Canada, Says Conditions in the Old Land Are Improving

MAJOR F. G. GILL, D.S.O., of Gill and Duffus, London, Eng., and Liverpool and Glasgow, is in Canada on a business trip. Gill and Duffus are importers and exporters in the Old Country. Mr. Gill arrived in Toronto on Sunday from New York and will visit Western Canada, including Vancouver, before sailing for home from Quebec on June 7. In Toronto he visited W. G. Patrick & Co.

Speaking of conditions in the Old Country he said they were gradually on the mend. He attributes much of the business troubles of the British manufacturer to the taxation he has had to bear, but this will soon be righted. Other troubles included those of labor, the coal strike and price of sugar, but he said the Old Country manufacturer will soon be in position to go after business with his usual strength.

Referring to the French shelled walnut situation, Mr. Gill stated that prices had been advancing of late at a rapid rate. In the past month or so they went up more than 50 per cent. with prospects for continued high prices for some time at least.

"There is an evident shortage in France," he said. "Last fall everybody endeavored to get out of walnuts with the result that prices went down. An early spring in France and low prices resulted in many French walnut crackers going out and working on the land. This created the shortage to a large extent. Opinions naturally vary as to the quantities available but generally it is considered that a good market can be found for all the French shelled walnuts that can be secured.

"Another contributing cause to the higher prices is the fact that the franc has appreciated recently in value," added Mr. Gill.

A Canadian importer told Canadian Grocer that present import prices meant an 80-cent shelled walnut here.

Making Small Windows of Real Value

A Store is To a Great Extent Very Frequently Judged by Its Window Displays—Some Suggestions Are Made With a View To Helping the Merchant Who Has Windows That Do Not Readily Lend Themselves To Attractive Dressing

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL, May 3. — One of Canadian Grocer's subscribers has asked for some suggestions as to how he may improve the appearanec of his front window. As this merchant's problem is not an uncommon one and faces many grocers throughout Canada, the suggestions given herewith may be helpful to many subscribers.

This merchant has a fairly large store with plenty of counter and floor space and two windows; each is about twelve feet long, but only about two and one-half feet in depth. It is the narrowness of the window that affords the problem. As the store is on a corner, the merchant has a window on each street, which is very advantageous if only the windows can be attractively dressed. Then another problem arises which emphasizes the first. Almost directly opposite to this grocery store is another grocery that has one very spacious window which is quite suited to very attractive window dressing on a large scale. The first merchant realizes his handicap, and in an endeavor to overcome it, he has called Canadian Grocer to his aid.

Window Lacks Depth

In the first place, the window is not deep enough to permit dressing it on the flat, with the result that such things as fruits, vegetables and bulk goods cannot be displayed in quantities sufficiently large to be outstanding. At the present time this merchant is using pyramids of canned goods, which alone in the window give a rather barren appearance. The long, straight line of cans only emphasizes the narrowness of the window, and detracts from the general appearance of the store. On the other hand, the window is absolutely lacking in color while the big orderly pile of oranges in the window across the street supplies abundance of natural color, commanding attention even at some distance away, and giving life to the appearance of the store. The problem, therefore, that faces the merchant in question is first to increase, if possible the floor space of his window, and secondly, to give plenty of color to the display used, whether it be natural or artificial coloring.

Eliminating the idea of increasing the depth of the window at the expense of the floor space, or since it might cost more to make the alterations than the merchant would care to spend, it is easy to build to the back of the window three or four "uprights" about three feet high. From these build a platform that will slant to the front of the window. If the window was only two and a half feet wide before, and the "uprights" at the back of the window are three feet high, it is easily seen that the new floor to the window will be 3 3-5 feet wide, giving almost a foot more width. Or, in the case of a window twelve feet long, there will be almost twelve square feet more window space. Besides the slant of the new floor makes the displays more prominent and allows an artistic arrangement of fruits, etc.

To Facilitate Dressing

In making this false floor to the window, a section in the centre of the window about two and a half feet wide may be attached to the rest of the floor by hinges. It can then be swung up out of place, like a trap door, to allow the one who is dressing the window to get down to the front of the window with ease, leaving the hinged part to the last to be dressed.

A Background Gives Depth

Another method, which will not be even as expensive as the first mentioned, is to build a background to the present window. As the window stands, there is no background to it. An important feature to be remembered is that the color of the background has a great deal to do with the apparent depth of the window. For instance, a window with a dark green background will look deeper than one with a background of red or some other high color, or even a light varnish. Green baize or burlap will cover at a very low cost a cheap and hastily erected partition at the back of the window. If four or six "uprights" two feet high are attached to the corners and sides of the window and a strip of wood nailed across the tops of these, forming a fence, to which the baize may be tacked, the window will appear deeper and consequently be more attractive, having a finished appearance. At a very small cost the "uprights" and the strip of wood forming the railing may be stained mission oak, which looks well with the deep green of the baize or the burlap.

Balancing the Window

There are many knacks in dressing a window so that all the available space may be used without giving the window a crowded appearance. Perhaps the most important factor in dressing a window is to get it well balanced. First of all, the length of the window should be measured and the centre found. In the case of a window which is to be entirely covered, as is often the case with fruit, vegetables or bulk goods, the dressing should start in the front of the window at the very centre and work from there in both directions. In that way the displace may be kept in perfect balance and a given design may be worked out.

A Simple Display of Fruit

A simple and attractive display of fruit may be arranged for a small window such as is in question, in the following manner: Cover the base of the window with black crepe paper, or blue paper; too high a coloring may be offensive to the eye. Black is not often used, but with oranges is rather pleasing. In the very centre of the window place a small barrel hoop which has been covered with the same colored paper as used on the base of the window. The hoop will just about fit into a window of the dimensions mentioned. Build up a pyramid of oranges in the hoop. Two together three short laths of equal length. These should be covered similarly to the hoop and placed at equal distances on either side of the hoop. Lemons or grapefruit may be used in these triangles, but if lemons are used in one they should also be used in the other. Two ordinary shallow baskets, draped with the paper used on the base of the window, may be filled with grapefruit and one placed at either end of the window. Quite a bit of space remains unused, but it is not desirable that the window should be crowded. The sug-

Fernie, B. C., Grocer Finds Equipment Pays Returns

Facilities For Rendering Quick and Efficient Service as Well as Making for Attractive Displays Are Valuable

JAMES PODBIELANCIK, in Fernie, B.C., believes that equipment that facilitates service, and at the same time displays and keeps his stock in first-class condition, is a good investment. The accompanying photograph will indicate that this grocer has fitted out his store in a manner that renders his place of business attractive. "I believe that equipment that reduces labor to a minimum, and renders the display of goods advantageous, pays returns on the money expended," Mr. Podbielancik told a representative of Canadian Grocer.

Patented bins are a part of the fixtures of this store, and glass display cases, it will be seen, are prominent. Every convenience that adds to the service that can be given the public has not been overlooked. A refrigerator display counter for produce and provisions is a feature, Mr. Podbielancik states, that has meant greatly increased sales of smoked and cooked meats. He also has a meat slicer which together with the refrigerator counter has meant much in the way of stimulating business in the produce department. An electric coffee mill is also busy all the time, and the freshly ground coffee that it makes it possible to sell is greatly appreciated by the customers.

Window displays are always backed up with attractive interior displays, as Mr. Podbielancik believes most satisfactory results are obtained in this way.

WHY SOME CLAIM BUSINESS BAD

RECENTLY the writer was conversing with a merchant on business in general, and the latter was lamenting the fact that business was apparently going to the "dogs" as his sales had dropped off considerably during the past six months. This conversation occurred in the merchant's own store. The writer dug a little deeper into the matter, in an effort to analyze the situation, to find out just why this retailer complained so bitterly about the poor business when other merchants in his town all spoke enthusiastically about the satisfactory condition of trade. Two glass jars on the show case, one containing shelled walnuts and the other shelled almonds, both a trifle the worse for wear, had price tags attached, $1.00 per pound. Other lines also carried price tags that apparently had been attached months ago as each bore figures that represented peak prices.

Inquiring as to whether shelled nuts had a ready sale, the writer was informed that "sales were rotten." His customers claimed, he said, the price was too high. The merchant acknowledged the fact that shelled nuts wholesale were about forty per cent. lower than when he bought, but he could not see where he was justified in bringing down his selling price to a point where he would be shown a loss on his investment.

This again brings us to the point that has time and again been discussed in these columns—selling prices must be based on the cost of replacement and not on invoice cost. This equally applies to a falling and rising market. The merchant who takes his loss immediately is taking a loss that is only temporary, and business is carried on as usual. The merchant who is lax in repricing his merchandise according to replacement values, is leaving a loop hole, and an excuse for his customers to trade elsewhere.

Another fact to be considered, is that re-marking prices in accordance with present wholesale prices, although indirectly showing a loss, directly shows a profit. Take the case of the merchant selling shelled almonds at $1 per pound. This merchant claimed that they cost 70 cents. But the fact is, almonds can be bought to-day for 40 cents, and if this merchant dropped his selling price to say 65 cents, he would then be in a position to take that 65 cents and buy another pound for 40 cents and make a gross profit of 25 cents on the next pound that was sold. Think it over.

MUST SELL IN ORIGINAL PACKAGE

THE assertion has been made that some grocers selling oleomargarine are in the habit of cutting pound prints in two, where the customer has asked only for half a pound. These merchants may possibly be in ignorance of the law in respect to the sale of oleomargarine, and a close perusal of the amendment to the oleomargarine act as applying to Canada, and effective from February, 1920, which is reproduced in this issue, will be worth while. The law states that no person shall sell, offer, expose, or have in possession for sale in Canada, any oleomargarine unless it is contained in the original package, which shall bear the official inspection mark of the country of origin, together with the name and address of the manufacturer.

The grocer can sell half pounds of oleomargarine, but they must be packed as such. The cutting of a pound print in two is not lawful, and the grocers who have not been observing the regulations in this regard will do well to strictly adhere to them in the future. Inspectors of the Government are keeping in touch with this matter, and infractions of the law are being punished by fines where the practice has been proved.

The law does not alone apply to the pound prints, but pails and boxes, too, must not be sold other than in the original packages. Violations of the regulations are liable to a minimum fine of fifty dollars, and a maximum of five hundred dollars and costs.

LIGHTING IS IMPORTANT

IT is generally conceded that the window in a retail store is the most valuable space on the premises. The live merchant is beginning to realize it to the extent of utilizing every device known to the trade, plus his ingenuity to make it as attractive as possible.

With him it has become an accepted fact that goods tastefully displayed are half sold and as his prospective customers receive their first impression from the window it goes without saying that it should be favorable if it is to be effective. This leads to another point quite equal if not paramount to the first. Good light, and abundance of it, is admitted a strong factor in merchandising and the effect of the carefully dressed window is largely discounted unless supplemented by perfect illumination.

Many of the lighting units hitherto in use have proven woefully inefficient owing to a large percentage of the light being absorbed during the process of distribution.

There are a great many lighting systems on the market, many of them of little use. Consequently the merchant should take every care to see to it that he thoroughly investigates this matter before purchasing.

IS "NO DELIVERY" ECONOMIC?

A CLOSE student of economics, writing recently on the subject of distribution, discusses the statement that has repeatedly been made in the past few years, to the effect that the elimination of the overhead of delivery service and the withdrawal of credit facilities would result in a drastic cutting of retail prices. This is the result, he states, of viewing price only in its nearest aspect. Take a city or town with 500 homes, he points out, located within an average distance of half a mile from the trading centre. In a "no delivery" system, the time of those 500 individuals is taken up by causing them to travel an aggregate of 500 miles a day in order to save a cost of, at the most, three or four delivery wagons. Such a practice, he urges, can be justified only on the ground that the time of individuals engaged in housekeeping is absolutely worthless, and that the only price to consider in cost saving is the price at the door of the store, and not the price at the point of use.

While the Cash and Carry store has filled an economic need in many industrial centres, where a certain portion of the population find it more satisfactory to serve themselves on all the elements that enter into the service grocer's business rather than to be served, there is no doubt that there is still a well defined place for the man who is providing a service of delivery. This writer is of the opinion that reductions in prices brought about by the curtailment of service are to be closely scanned.

The real loss in distribution, he finds, comes between the retailer and the manufacturer and is caused by the introduction of the speculative element as the greatest factor in the business of each of them. This results in distracting the merchants' attention from strict merchandising and the economies and profits to be realized from rapidity of turnover, and from the public service of buying and selling only dependable and easily moved lines.

LIKE A SUGAR-COATED PILL

THE interest of all branches of trade is more or less centred at the present time in the forthcoming budget of the finance minister. Just what the new taxation proposals will be is mere conjecture, and retailers and manufacturers are not of one mind as to what form this taxation should take. The Dominion Retailers' Association has urged that a turnover tax at the source of supply be brought down, while on the other hand, a proposal of a tax of one per cent. on all turnover involving manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer alike has been suggested.

It would seem that the first suggestion of a tax at the source of supply would be the most adaptable at the present time. Such a tax would be fairest to all concerned, and would be accepted by the public without question, and as it were unconsciously. One business man likened it to the chocolate coated pill, so easy and pleasant to take, regardless of the real effect and nature of the actual ingredients. The other method would involve loss to the retailer, and more or less explanation on the part of the merchant to a frequently rebellious public.

EDITORIALS IN BRIEF

JUST AS customers choose a certain store because it is reliable, so should the merchant do his buying from firms of unquestionable trustworthiness.

A GROCER in British Columbia always advertises his fruits, that is, oranges and lemons, in larger quantities than is usually the custom. He finds it just as easy, and it means greatly increased sales. Have you tried it?

THE GROCER should overlook no opportunity to sell these days. It is in adopting every attractive selling plan, as well as exerting every selling effort, that he is going to maintain his business at satisfactory levels.

THE MERCHANT can always be sure of his buying when he is thinking of his customers. They desire good value for their money, dependable merchandise which they can trust, and variety. If a new product of merit comes on the market, they look to the merchant to introduce it.

"What are Your Sales per Employee?"

No One Index is More Illuminating to Your Business or Vitally Informative Than is the Answer to This Question—Another Discussion on Turnover

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

A REPORT is to hand of a store where sales are $800,000 with 100 people engaged. Sales, therefore, average $8,000 per person. In another store, in a town of 918 people, sales run to about $986,000 with 60 workers, including the firm personnel.

Thus while the former sells $8,000 per person, the latter sells over $16,000. So in that one item alone the first mentioned cuts overhead to less than half of the other.

I know of no one index that can be more illuminating to your business or vitally informative to you than to ascertain what are your sales per person employed. I have not found exactly that information anywhere. Harvard's analysis shows sales per sales person only. These are worth careful study. In the comparatively few lines in which statistics are as yet available, they are as follows:

Groceries, 1914, $5,000 to $20,000, average	$10,000
Groceries, 1918	15,800
Shoes, 1917	10,000
Hardware, 1919	15,000
Jewelry, 1919	18,000

Such records are very valuable. These show, for example, that sales among grocery sales people did not rise in volume, to speak of. Enhanced values in groceries were sufficient to cover the apparent increase in sales between the two dates. Also, in some lines, like shoes for instance, records of sales per sales person are worth more than in groceries because the work is more specialized in shoe than in grocery stores.

Harvard has segregated shoe stores into various classes. In ordinarily well-managed, low-priced shoe stores, in 1917, salesmen averaged $7,500 a year of sales. In well-managed, low-priced stores they averaged $9,000. In medium-priced the figure was $10,200, and in high-priced stores the sales were only slightly more than $10,200 per sales person. In such stores, individual records are of great value as may be seen by the following Harvard story:

In a certain shoe store, one man sold between $6,000 and $7,000 a year while another in the same store sold $25,000. obviously, "the first salesman was a weak spot in the organization." The degree of such weakness is seldom realized unless "records are kept to enable the merchant to detect and cut out poor workers."

Sales Per Employee Preferred

But I prefer to know the average sales figured on the entire force, for that gives a quick gauge on the business and leaves no factors to be estimated or eliminated as in the case of specialized work. Then if sales fall off, intensive investigation is very easy. In fact, records of individual sales can be kept from the tape of any modern cash register, and it should be done concurrently with other records. Such records are a constant prod and inspiration—depending on whether the clerk is a leader and ambitious or a follower who lags as far rearward as he can and yet hold his job. You want to know which is which!

A few years ago I investigated conditions in a rather large city and found sales to run from $7,500 to $14,400 per worker in various types of grocery stores. "Per worker" includes everybody from the owner down. The low figure came from a fancy store, where many high-priced luxuries were carried, prices set regardless, service exacting and costly, many fancy confections and bakery goods manufactured and sold. The high figure came from a chain of limited service stores. This was natural — volume on low prices, slower turn on high-grade goods.

Watchfulness to cut out the "sleepers" from your sales force will help wonderfully in speeding your turn with consequent expense reduction. Note the immense advantage a man enjoys in his help expense. This is investigation you can follow with the least effort, that you can check continually with little consumption of time, that it will pay you to keep after consistently.

When we come to turnover on various lines of merchandise, it can be demonstrated that short stocks turn most rapidly and yield the biggest earnings in proportion of capital used. But it is obvious that to carry this reasoning to its ultimate conclusion would lead us to feel that we should buy only a package or two, say, of starch, and buy another package when one is sold. But we know that such method would defeat our purpose because then the handling charge would be multiplied several times. So maybe we should feel that from one day to thirty days should be the limits within which groceries should be turned. Lettuce and bread belong in the one-day class; canned goods, potatoes, cabbage, in the thirty-day. I think it can be shown that longer than thirty days on anything means loss.

Fallacy of Slow Turns on Any Goods

For example, if a man buys a case of catsup and sells it in a month and buys again, say, for $2.25 the dozen and sells it for 25 cents, figuring 20 per cent. burden for expense plus loading, he will make 5 per cent. net each month, 30 cents per month, 80 per cent. on $4.50 capital a year. But if he buys six cases at "ten off" he will use $24.30 capital and, in six months with one turnover, figuring 20 per cent. burden against 32½ per cent. margin with 12½ per cent. net, he will make $4.50 twice a year, $9 a year. Thus he will have only about 37 per cent. on capital instead of 80 per cent. The man with liberal supplies of capital is apt to say: "That's all right enough, but by using $24.30 capital I make $9 a year and that is a lot more than $3.60." I have a New England friend who contends just that way. But follow it down to its logical conclusion and see where it leads. For if to carry heavy stocks you use $6 where $1 would do, you will find yourself using $6,000 where keen, alert management would call for only $1,000—you will use $36,000 where $6,000 would enable you to operate with tight reins. The greatest possible danger lurks in these apparently "profitable" six-to-one shots.

It is precisely this habit of loose thought and action that leads to a condition wherein grocers carry many times the stock they really need in their business. A man who does $50,000 a year, figuring twelve turns as the correct minimum ratio of turnover, should carry stock of $3,300 to $3,400. But everywhere he now is carrying $5,000, $10,000, even $12,000 in locations not far removed from primary markets. It is not the single item or instance that harms us so much as the habit which leads to the multiplicity of items carried far and away in excess of normal, safe and sane requirements. These lead to loss not only of profits but of capital as well. It is this practice that encourages the boarders and shelf-warmers to accumulate and make increasingly long stays. This is one shortcoming which robs the man of capital of earnings he might otherwise realize, and which brings disaster on numbers of men with limited or scant resources.

Quantity Buying with Speeded Selling!

All of this does not mean that the merchant must never buy quantities. It is all right to buy quantities if then you turn round and speed sales—if you also do quantity selling.

Recently a jobber asked me if it was legitimate to offer retailers brooms in lots of ten dozen at $8.75 the dozen which had a current market value of $10. His "deal" provided for shipment of five dozen at once and five dozen thirty days later. I told him that would be a fine deal, provided he could get grocers not merely to buy but also to sell those brooms.

Let us suppose you have been selling a dozen brooms a month. You can take on this kind of deal if you take each lot of five dozen as it is received and put it in the front part of your store, put price cards on it, display the brooms so every customer may be reminded of them, and otherwise speed the sale so you will turn out at least nine dozen within the sixty days. Such a sale would not increase your turnover in brooms at all — you would still be moving them only at the rate of one turn per month — but it would increase your earnings by adding quantity to your turnover and the increased sales and profits would justify the probability that the last dozen might not move out for sixty days.

Business grows by sales. If you increase sales, you grow. If you grow, you employ more capital—in exact proportion as you grow. If you get the spirit and happen to apply it logically and in a way fitting your environment, you will then be on the road to become a great merchant. But always study this question of the relation of capital to turnover, and figure out exactly what will happen to any given investment in stocks you are tempted to make.

Always remember, too, that expenses are heavier on a slow than on a fast turn, so that it is probable that an article which, on a thirty-day turn, would bear 20 per cent. burden would have around 23 per cent. to bear if turned in two months.

Finds Designing Window Displays on Paper Effective

SHERBROOKE, Que., May 4.—S. S. Hazel, manager of F. P. Houlahan & Co., grocery, Sherbrooke, Que., has great faith in the sales value of a well dressed window. He gives a good deal of attention to the arrangement of the two windows, one on each side of the front entrance of the store. Each week he systematically prepares a suitable design for the display of the goods he wishes to push, and spares no trouble to get the best results possible from these silent salesmen.

Designs Window on Paper

His plan is to first decide what line of goods is most suitable for the particular season, or else to choose a specialty line that is suitable to any period. His next step is to think of a design to which he may adapt this line of merchandise. To do this, he keeps account of the windows designed by others and pictures of windows published in Canadian Grocer; not that he may copy these designs, but because they suggest improved ideas or a re-arrangement of the same plan. When he has thus formed a picture in his mind of the window he is about to dress, he draws the design on paper, using dimensions in proportion to the dimensions of the window to be dressed. In this way when the plan is drawn, he can tell just about the very spot on which to place the merchandise so that the window will be perfectly balanced. Mr. Hazel's idea of the proper way to dress a window is to begin at the center front, and working on first one side and then on the other to dress the window towards the back.

Pronounced Results

In speaking to a Canadian Grocer representative of the results from Mr. Hazel's window dressing, F. P. Houlahan said, "The results in increased sales from the display in our windows is pronounced. It certainly justifies all the efforts of the man who really studies the art and also the time taken to make the display as effective as possible. For example, Sherbrooke is on one of the main highways that leads into the United States from this province. These roads are good and the scenery is beautiful, especially in the mountains. Consequently many of our townspeople and the tourist take week-end trips to these resorts. During that season we remember that these people need dainty picnic lines and specialties, some of which they would never be ordering for their own homes. When Mr. Hazel dresses a window in the attractive way he succeeds in getting by his systematic efforts, immediately we notice the sales in these lines pick up, lines that the people would never think of buying if they were not brought to their attention.

Widen Grocer's Scope

"The grocer may use his windows to advantage to widen the scope of his business. There are many lines that most grocers do not handle and yet there is good money in their sale and a sale for the goods if only he would exploit the line. Such specialty lines the people never think of unless the grocer draws their attention to them and then he will find that through his windows, if in no other way, there is a demand set up for merchandise for which he thought there was hardly any sale."

These Stands Make Window Dressing Easy

MONTREAL, May 3.—A grocer in this city has adopted a plan for dressing his windows which, although it may not be new, nevertheless saves much time and enables him to change his windows regularly. In a very few minutes he can have an attractive display ready. Sometimes the grocer, who has not on his staff an experienced window dresser, is perplexed as to how he may change the style of his display so that it will not become commonplace. The idea of novelty is recognized as an important feature in atracting attention to a window display.

This grocer had made three wooden stands of different designs. One is in the shape of a triangular stand made up of three tiers. The dimensions of the stand depend entirely upon the size of the window. The width of the base of the triangle, that is the triangle of the bottom tier, is just slightly under the width of the window itself. The height of the bottom triangle depends upon the depth of the window. The stand is so built that when it is inserted in the window the apex comes about two feet from the front of the window. It may be built of two, three or four tiers. When placed in the window it has the appearance of three triangular blocks, the largest one on the bottom and the smallest one on top. In this way three shelves are formed on which the goods may be displayed.

The second stand used by this merchant is built in the same manner but is circular in shape and gives the appearance of three circular shelves in the window. The third is a tier of five perfectly straight shelves built in the form of steps and is simplest to make. Each can be easily placed in position and removed.

It takes but a very few minutes to dress a window when these are used and they may be adapted alternately so that the window has always a fresh appearance. Colored crepe paper may be draped over the stands quickly and a simple arrangement of the goods makes an effective display. The initial cost is comparatively small when it is realized that the stands will last for an indefinite time and it solves many problems as to how to make the window attractive.

Credit Men's Association in St. John, N.B., Hold Banquet

Business is Fundamentally Sound in the Maritimes, And The Few Failures That Have Taken Place Represent Only Small Amounts —Board of Governors Elected For Two Years

ST. JOHN, N.B., May 3 (Special).—The keynote sounded at the annual banquet of the Maritime division of the Canadian Credit Men's Trust Association, Ltd., held in St. John on Friday evening, April 29, was one of caution to the business man. H. W. Rising, the president, was in the chair and an informal talk was given by W. J. Ambrose, manager of the St. John branch of the Bank of Montreal. Several members made short speeches, and the annual report of the manager, T. H. Sommerville, was received.

Increase in Membership

Mr. Sommerville presented the ninth annual report of this division for 1920-1921. The membership increased from twenty-eight full and four associate members to thirty-three full and four associate. Instead of increasing membership fees, it was decided to charge for an excess of reports between branches, which would bring in the needed revenue. The financial statement showed a good balance on the year's operations. Failures that had taken place during the last few months were few and unimportant in amount. There was a feeling that business interests were not suffering severely from depression. The report strongly urged that adequate accounting was necessary to success. While the business of the Maritime Provinces was regarded as in a healthy state, expenditures should be limited to absolute needs. The unemployment situation was affecting trade and collections to some extent, but it was urged that creditors should give consideration to worthy debtors. The report was received and adopted.

Want Loyalty of Members

The president, H. W. Rising, said that while collections were good members did not use the association as much as when they were bad. Consequently members had dropped out. He asked that all be loyal to the organization, as it was useful to all merchants and manufacturers.

The following were announced as elected to the board of governors for two years: T. N. Campbell, of Moncton, N.B.; J. F. Edgett, of Moncton, N.B.; H. W. Emerson, W. A. Harrison, C. P. Humphrey, F. W Roach and E. M. Smith, all of St. John; elected for one year, E. J. Murphey, of Halifax.

Business Is Sound

In his talk on business conditions in the Maritime Provinces, W. J. Ambrose said that the bankers' viewpoint sometimes differed from that of the merchant. The banks had been preaching caution and prudence. They had advised that only such purchases be made as were necessary for actual business in view. Those that had followed this advice were now reaping the benefits. Business in the Maritime Provinces was fundamentally sound, he said. He described optimism as having faith in the future. He said that this spirit prevailed in the Maritime Provinces. With a reasonable amount of prudence and co-operation between the debtor and creditor merchants could be assisted and eventually become successful.

Lack of Good Faith

W. Matthews, of Moncton, N.B., agreed with the former speaker's policy of caution. R. T. Hayes, M.P.P., said one cause of depression was the lack of good faith by those they dealt with in cancelling orders. J. G. Harrison said that the advice given was sound. Most of the merchants were overstocked and while grocers had liquidated stocks pretty well, other lines had not. Need of co-operation was voiced by F. W. Roach. It was in the best interest of debtor and creditor. The debtor should not be forced too much, but given a chance to turn round. E. L. Rising attributed the setback to business to the luxury tax, but expected better conditions during the next six months.

This Window Made Appeal To the Farmers

London, Ont., May 4.—Gardner's Grocery, on the Market Square, has a window display this week that has carried a strong appeal to farmers. It is some what unusual in that each line of merchandise is set apart in the window in a wooden tray. A feature is that each tray carries its own price card in large figures. There are about twenty trays placed in the window, each containing a different line. In this way the various lines are shown attractively and with the prices so prominently given they make a display of considerable interest. Farmers, it is stated, are keenly interested just now in prices and the firm plans to meet their first inquiry, that is, "How much?" by telling them in large figures. This plan has worked out well.

Will Tend to Bring a Better Quality Fruit

W. B. Stringer, Toronto, representing various packers of Messina lemons, who recently returned from a three months' trip to Italy, stated to Canadian Grocer that the proposed tariff of the United States will tend to curtail the importation of Messina lemons, or possibly Italian growers will be compelled to reduce their prices to meet the competition of the California product. It will also have the effect of stopping consignments of lemons to New York. "Many of these consignments in the past have been poor quality fruit, and if the tariff bill goes through this will be stopped, as all shipments will have to be on a payment basis. This perhaps may be a good thing as it will tend to bring a better quality fruit to this market," said Mr. Stringer.

"One thing I tried to do when I was in Italy," continued Mr. Stringer, "and that was to interest shippers in the Canadian Merchant Marine and to influence shippers to make direct shipments to Montreal. If this can be arranged, it will mean lemons for Canadian houses escaping the United States tax and cost of transportation will be lesened."

CORN FLAKES DOWN TO 1918 LEVEL

Toronto, May 2.—Along in line with the drop in other commodities, a big reduction is announced in quotations on corn flakes. Last week a drop of 20 cents per case was registered on Kellogg's Waxtite and a further reduction of 55 cents is noted this week. Kellogg's corn flakes, London make, Post Toasties and Quaker are also down 50 to 60 cents per case.

These reductions practically bring quotations down to the 1918 level and are attributed principally to the declining corn market. American white corn which is used in the manufacture of corn flakes has declined from the high point of $1.40 per bushel to around 70 cents. Labor is still at the peak but a slight recession is noted in the cost of cases, paper and cartons.

The W. K. Kellogg Cereal Co., Toronto, have removed their sales office from the Bank of Hamilton Building, Yonge Street, to the factory on Strachan Avenue.

FREE SEEDS

Almost everyone who has a little garden patch has a desire to plant something in the spring. A retail grocer in Ontario recently advertised to give free a package of vegetable or flower seeds of their own choosing for the asking with every purchase amounting to fifty cents made on a certain Monday.

"Too Many Low Standard Stores"

R. H. Meek, Chief Food Inspector in Vancouver, B.C., Believes That the Number of Grocery Stores Should Be Controlled According to the Population, Without, However, Checking Free Competition

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER (Special). — R. H. Meek, chief food inspector for the city of Vancouver, in an interview with Canadian Grocer concerning the grocery business, remarked that in his work he was struck with the fact that there are more grocery stores than are needed to take care of the distribution of groceries to the population of Vancouver. There are more entering the grocery business all the time, he stated. He did not like to see any line of business regulated unduly, or any check upon free competition, but it must be remembered that all the cost of distribution falls on the consumer. If there are twice as many distributing organizations to be kept up as are necessary, the expense of distribution must be approximately twice as heavy a burden on the community.

"The old liquor arrangement was reasonable in one particular at least," he continued. "The number of saloons that could be licensed was based on the population. Some such regulation would be a good thing in almost all retail business, but I don't think that such a drastic and arbitrary law would be necessary.

Standard for Grocers

"A plan that would be equally effective and better for the public and the grocery trade would be one such as this. Let the grocers as a trade complete their organization to a point where they can speak with authority for the trade, and let the association make a study of the subject and draft a standard for grocers. What constitutes a grocer? What knowledge should a grocer have? Should he know how long any line of food will keep in perfectly wholesome condition? Should he be able to judge the quality of spices, teas, coffees, and bacons and the thousand and one lines that constitute a grocery stock? It seems reasonable to me that he should.

Must Meet the Requirements

"Let the association then decide what ability the grocery business requires, and put the data in tangible form. Then the authorities granting licenses to enter the grocery business could require an applicant to measure up to the requirements before he obtained a license to do business. If the association were strong and authoritative, sufficient pressure could be brought to bear on me or the licensing department, to have such examination made. Even a small, well qualified board could judge of the fitness of an applicant, the same as the druggists do, the association to appoint one member, the wholesalers another member and the city the third.

A Certificate of Competency

"It would be unfair to make all people now in the grocery business take an examination on "food retailing," but it would be quite possible to make any further entries into the field do so. It would be even feasible to decline to grant further licenses until increasing population warranted it. The experienced grocers desiring to enter the grocery business in Vancouver City, having satisfied the board that they were competent, would be granted a certificate of competency. If they could not get a new license owing to four hundred and fifty being the limit, for instance, they would then cast about until they located an incompetent retailer willing to sell out. The change would be beneficial to the community and most likely would be a godsend to the inexperienced grocer who was making "pretty heavy weather" of it.

Inefficients Drop Out

"There is always a tremendous trade mortality in the retail grocery business. Those grocers with small stocks and slow turnover who periodically figure in the list of bankrupts are continually responsible for the launching on the market of stale and deteriorated stocks. Many do not know the length of life of cereals, for instance, and good goods become stale and infested before they are put into consumption. A higher grade of retailers, and a higher standard of retailing efficiency would obviate much of this. If no more licenses were issued for a period and the "inefficients" continued to drop out and the better qualified grocers naturally redistributed their places of business to take care of each community, soon a reduction in the number of stores and an increase in the efficiency and turnover of those proficient would result. For the public the benefit would be better food purveyors, fresher supplies, and less expense burden. The benefit to the grocery trade as a whole would most certainly immediately occur to both retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers.

Retailers in Ignorance

"You know quite well the number of retailers engaged in selling foods who do not know their own business and do not now consider such knowledge necessary. Within the last few days we have seized and condemned 17 carcasses of veal in retail stores in Vancouver. Our local by-law is quite recent under which we instituted the inspection, so we did not prosecute. A great number of butchers professed to be in ignorance of why we insisted that a calf less than three weeks old was immature, or why all carcasses must have at least two feet and the head and the kidneys and surrounding fat and liver attached. The head shows the age, the feet show whether the calf was sufficiently robust to have stood on its feet and various diseases are shown by the other organs."

Desires Co-operation

In conclusion Mr. Meek stated that his department will co-operate most heartily with the good merchant. None of the regulations are a hardship on the good merchant, and they are the careless merchant's best protection against himself. Anything that will make for better merchandising, better service, and economy can be done by the grocers' association, and he emphasized the necessity of not only getting good regulations passed but a policy of advertising to the public why such regulations are in the public interest.

Mr. Meek commented on the food regulation articles recently run in Canadian Grocer and stated that what his department wanted was the observance of same, not the prosecution of a retailer for infractions.

BOOSTING TEA SALES

A merchant in Manitoba devised a pretty good scheme to increase the sales of a certain blend of tea. Procuring a list of his customers and also others whom he wished to reach, he sent each of them a sample, with a request that they try it and if found satisfactory to give him a trial. Accompanying each sample package was a slip headed "Prizes for Bright Boys and Girls" and giving particulars for a contest for the best short essays on how tea is grown and prepared for the market. There were six prizes and the children or their parents were invited to call at the tea department and make all the inquiries they desired concerning the subject of tea. The essays winning the first and second prizes were published in the local papers.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

DURING the week under review the raw sugar market has been steadily declining. The Sugar Finance Committee endeavored to sustain prices, holding firm at 4¾ cents c. & f. New York in bond, but later had to lower their price in accordance with Porto Ricos and full duty sugars, finally selling 120,000 bags at 3⅜ cents c. & f., at which figure the market is nominal at the moment although full duty sugars have since sold at 3½ cents c. & f. and Porto Ricos at 4.77 cents, both figures on the parity of 3¾ cents for Cubas.

There has been quite a rapid succession of declines in American refined. The week opened at $7.50, then dropped to $7.25, then to $7, later to $6.75, and finally settling at $6.50.

From Europe we hear that beet sugar sowings have shown an increase of 18 per cent. for Germany, 7 per cent. for Bohemia, and 10 per cent. for Holland and Belgium. It is estimated that the sugar crops of the world, both cane and beet, will amount to 16,475,633 tons, an increase of 1,281,418 tons over last year. There is a possibility of the falling off in the Cuban production as during the week two factories have ceased grinding. The weather has been unfavorable, retarding work, and in addition the financial condition, it is expected, will result in other factories closing shortly.

There has been no change in Canadian refined although there is some irregularity in prices as some wholesales are selling below the refiners' list, apparently wishing to get rid of their holdings.

Cereals are lower and reductions are announced on corn flakes, which brings the price to the 1918 level. The two pound tins of corn syrup, both yellow and white, are reduced.

Shelled walnuts and almonds continue firm and higher under a strong demand. Prunes and apricots are easier but evaporated apples are firm and higher. Several cars of evaporated apples have left Toronto for Great Britain, which is rather unusual for this season as no export business has previously transpired nor had packers been expecting any.

Teas continue to rule firm in practically all primary markets with the exception of Calcutta. The easy condition of Indias principally falls on the lower grades, the better grades commanding fairly high prices. Coffees are also firm in price and although prices at present to the retail trade are unchanged the tendency is for higher levels before the end of the year.

The butter market recorded a sensational drop during the week with conditions still weak and a further slump seems inevitable. Eggs are likewise weak with lower prices likely. The lower condition of the egg market is attributed to the poor prospects for export and those packers who were storing have now ceased to a great extent as the prospect for fall prices is very uncertain. Live hogs are easier and lower.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 4.—The most active section of the grocery market this week is the fruit and vegetable market. Bigger supplies of new fruit and vegetables are arriving and the quality is improved. Tomatoes and cabbage are cheaper, while a little easier price is quoted on red onions. The first Montreal curly lettuce is on the market and also a plentiful supply of green, bunch onions. Cucumbers are scarce on account of the big demand both in the United States and Canada and prices are higher. There is a noticeable improvement in the quality of strawberries arriving and prices are reduced. Grapefruit is a little higher in price and oranges are stronger. Pineapples are in good supply with lower prices. The sugar market is steady with a firmer tone to the raw market. The only change in molasses is an adjustment to prices on fancy tinned goods. The two pound tins of corn syrup are reduced. The primary tea markets are stronger and only the lack of movement in this market is preventing higher prices here. Apricots and prunes are lower in price but Smyrna figs are practically off the market with higher prices quoted on remaining stocks. Walnuts and almonds continue to advance in price.

COFFEE—Although the primary coffee markets have been gaining strength quotations made by local dealers are unchanged and prices are steady. There is a good movement of coffee and prices are expected to hold for some time.

Higher Prices for Walnuts

Montreal.

NUTS—The nut market is a little quieter than it has been since dealers have bought up stocks sufficient to carry them over the summer. Walnuts, however, are still very strong in price and Bordeaux halves are quoted at from 65 to 73 cents. Shelled almonds are advanced another cent per pound this week with a very strong market and every likelihood of a further advance.

Apricots and Prunes Lower

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS—Some weakness is shown in the market for apricots and prunes. There has been a poor movement of apricots and wholesalers have reduced the price of fancy to 33 cents, choice 34 cents and slabs 22 cents in order to stimulate business. The prune market is also weaker and prices on the smaller sizes are reduced 1 and 1½ cents a pound. Raisins are scarce and are holding up in price. Smyrna figs are advanced 1 cent a pound and primary markets are cleaned up. Currants are a little easier in price but local quotations are unchanged.

Molasses Market Steady

Montreal.

MOLASSES—Bulk molasses is unchanged in price but some of the fancy molasses in tins are reduced 15 per cent. Molasses prices in general are steady and this change is an adjustment on tinned goods, following the declines that have taken place on bulk stocks. There is just one change on corn syrups, the two pound tins having been reduced 50 cents per case. Yellow is quoted at $4 and the white at $4.60.

Sugar Market More Steady

Montreal.

SUGAR—The sugar market is standing fairly steady at the price after the reduction made one week ago. There is a steadier feeling to the raw sugar market and prices have been holding up fairly well through the week. This feeling is transmitted to the refined market with like results. Refiners look for prices to hold for some time on this basis.

Teas Are More Steady

Montreal.

TEAS—The primary tea markets show more strength, particularly on Ceylon and Indian teas. Local dealers state, however, that it is having little effect on markets in this province since the movement of the teas has not improved. Prices are unchanged and are more steady in view of the strength of the primary markets.

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS — There is no change in the canned goods market. The trade in this line has been rather quiet for the last two weeks, but prices on such lines of canned vegetables as tomatoes, corn and peas are standing firm with wholesalers' stocks running low. There is a fair demand for canned fruit but prices are steady.

Rice Prices Go Lower

Montreal.

RICE—Rice prices are still on the downward trend with wholesalers cutting prices to get all the business possible. Fancy Carolina rice is quoted as low as 7 cents and Texas rice is down to 4¾ cents. Honduras rice is quoted at 5 cents. There is a campaign on at the present time to increase the consumption of rice, but dealers state that it is not having a noticeable effect. The rice market is in a stagnant condition.

Lower Prices on Vegetables

Montreal.

VEGETABLES—The feature of the vegetable market this week is a bigger supply of fresh vegetables with lower prices quoted on most lines. The big demand for cucumbers both from Canada and the United States has resulted in higher prices, now quoted at $6.50 per hamper. Tomatoes are cheaper this week, selling at $8 per crate with a bigger supply. The first Montreal curly lettuce is on the market, quoted at $3.50 per box. With the higher prices on onions a larger supply came forward and prices on red onions dropped to $3 per bag. New cabbage is very plentiful and lower at $3. Green onions are on the market in good supply. There is a good demand for all lines of fresh vegetables.

Fruit at Lower Prices

Montreal.

FRUIT—The fruit market is in an excellent condition this week with a good supply and a good demand for all lines. For some time Porto Rico grapefruit has been holding down the price and now that their season is practically over prices are firming up with an advance of 25 cents per case. There is a good supply of oranges but an effort on the part of the shippers has resulted in an advance of 25 cents per case on the larger sizes. The orange crop this year has been very plentiful and the consumption has also been large. Bigger supplies of pineapples are on the market with prices down to $6.50 per case. The last shipment of strawberries that came to the city showed a big improvement in quality and prices have declined to around 35 cents a quart.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 4.—Cereals are easy and reductions are noted on practically the complete list. Corn flakes are further reduced. Shelled walnuts continue firm under a strong demand and limited supplies. Almonds are also firmer with tendencies for higher prices. A reduction is announced on two pound tins of corn syrups. A scarcity is noted on canned pumpkin and higher prices are likely. Canned vegetables are holding steady under an active demand, while fruits are also showing an improved demand since wholesalers have reduced prices. Canadian milled Japan rice is offered and the market continues unsettled. Evaporated apples are firmer and higher under a more active movement. The flour market is firm. The sugar market is easy

Canned Pumpkin Scarce

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—There is a scarcity noted on canned pumpkin. This is attributed to the light pack the last season and the fact that there is a strong demand. One house is predicting higher prices and goes so far as to state that the price will reach $1.95 per dozen. At present pumpkin 2½s is offered at $1.45 to $1.50 per dozen. Canned fruits are showing a little better movement and wholesalers are generally quoting prices that are below cost. These prices are irregular. Vegetables are in active demand and the stable condition that has characterized this market for the past few weeks is still maintained. Canned spinach 2s is offered at $1.60 per dozen. Jams are also in good demand and prices generally appear to be on a more even keel.

Toronto.

BEANS.—Stocks of Ontario beans are rather light both in the country and in wholesalers' warehouses. The demand, however, has considerably fallen. Good samples of two- to three-pound pickers are generally quoted at $3 to $3.25 per bushel but in one quarter they are offered at $2.80. California limas are selling at 10 cents per pound and Madagascars at 5¾ cents per pound.

Evaporated Apples Firm

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS.—Evaporated apples have developed a stronger tone and prices are advanced 1½ cents per pound. There is a good movement in evaporated apples both for domestic and export trade. Several cars have left Toronto for Great Britain, which is rather unusual for this season as no export business was expected. Prunes are weak but there is a good demand for consumption. Currants are firm and stocks in primary markets are fairly well cleaned up.

Walnuts Quoted Higher

Toronto.

NUTS.—Shelled walnuts continue in a strong position with quotations on spot supplies advanced five cents per pound, bringing the price in case lots to 65 cents and in broken lots 70 cents. Stocks in France are practically exhausted and there is no possible chance of any improvement until the next crop is harvested. There is every appearance of prices reaching a higher level as there is a strong demand and apparently spot stocks are lower than they have been for several years. The import cost of replacement is now practically on the same level as prices quoted by wholesalers. Almonds are also in a strong position and although quotations are unchanged the tendency is for an advance. Pecans continue firm at high figures. Brazils are easy with lower prices likely.

WINNIPEG MARKETS

WINNIPEG, May 4.—The coffee market continues dull. Domestic sardines are being offered at lower quotations, while the demand for canned fruits and vegetables is showing an improvement. The heavy frost caused considerable damage to the fruit crop, but it is not thought it will cause any advance in price. The sugar market is easier. The spice market is firmer with the exception of black pepper. Teas on the primary market have advanced. All shelled nuts are showing firmer tone. The demand for fruits and vegetables is improving and lower prices are quoted.

Canned Goods in Demand

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS—Domestic sardines declined 50 cents per case and are quoted at $5.70 per case of 100 tins. Other lines of canned fish are firm and in fair demand. The demand is increasing for both canned fruits and vegetables due partly to the season and partly to lower prices. Quotations vary on account of different brands being put up by packing concerns. There is no stability to the market and packers are using this method of cleaning up stocks.

No Change in Dried Fruits

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUIT—Wholesalers report a better movement in dried fruits. Currants are firmer. Peaches are scarce and not selling rapidly. The California prune market is firmer and has advanced. The heavy frost which occurred throughout the fruit belt caused considerable damage to the new crop but from advices received there are large quantities of prunes still to be had, and it is not thought that prices will advance to any great extent. Apricots are moving freely at reduced prices. Evaporated apples are firmer. The recent advance in Ontario has not been reflected on the local market.

gestion of the window featuring these three kinds of fruit is for the making of marmalade. Consequently any other ingredients that the housewife requires might be added to the window as long as the symmetry is preserved. For instance, cartons or small gunnies of sugar may be arranged along the back of the window.

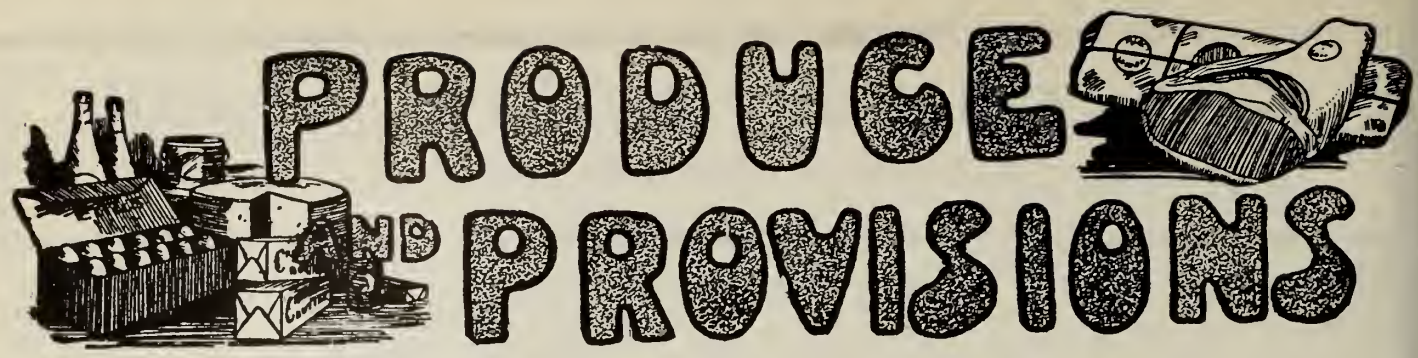
After all the attractivenesss of a window varies with the locality in which it is arranged. The time or season of the year should give more than a hint as to the proper display; it should dictate to the grocer. The success of the window is measured by two things, first, its general appearance, and, second, the results obtained. If one type doesn't bring results, try another type, but it is well to remember that to a great extent a store is judged by its window displays.

LOOKED TOO TEMPTING TO THIS HORSE

A runaway horse crashed through the large plate glass window of a retail grocer in a Western Ontario city, scattering the contents of the window. Inside of fifteen minutes the enterprising manager had hung above the ruins this sign: "Our display of picnic eatables looked so tempting he couldn't help it."

ADDING LIQUOR TO PICKLES

If there is a small shortage of liquor with sour pickles, replenish by using white distilled vinegar of ordinary table strength. When there is a considerable shortage, use diluted vinegar in the proportion of one gallon of water to each four gallons of vinegar, mixing same thoroughly before pouring over the pickles.



Sell Four Dozen Hams at Week-ends

V. R. Maylor, Forest, Ontario, Features Hams at Week-ends and Sales Have Always been a Success, one Week Usually Showing an Increase Over the Preceding One.

"THOSE are nice looking hams," said a customer in Maylor's Cash Store, Forest, Ont., pointing to a display of whole hams the other day, "weigh up that one, please," she added. The ham was weighed and, before it could be wrapped, another customer stepped up and said, "Those hams do look pretty nice. You can weigh up one for me, too."

Further down the counter another customer was giving her order to a clerk, and noticing what was doing at the other end she too became interested and said, "You might as well put a ham on my order." In five minutes three hams were sold without any apparent effort whatever. It looked to a Canadian Grocer representative, who was visiting the store on this Friday morning, that the Maylor store had a corner in hams.

Had to Increase Order

"What is the reason for all this rush in hams?" asked the Canadian Grocer man of V. R. Maylor.

"It occurred to me a couple of weeks ago that we could sell a bunch of hams if we went at it the right way," he replied. "We have always sold a considerable lot of bacon but mostly in pound and half-pound lots. Very rarely have we sold a side or even part of a side. Last week I ordered three dozen picnic hams for the week-end. They arrived on Friday morning, and by the middle of Saturday afternoon they were all sold. For this week I ordered four dozen, and with the start they have already taken I don't anticipate any difficulty in cleaning up the lot by tomorrow night."

"To what selling scheme do you attribute the success of your idea?" Mr. Maylor was asked.

"We sell these hams simply by talking about them to our customers who come into the store. We place a few on the counter. Then we introduce them to the customers. The attractive appearance and the price have something to do with it. Of course, in a small town such as this, nearly everyone knows each other, and when a store has something special, it does not take long for the news to spread around.

"It occurred to me a couple of weeks ago that we could sell a bunch of hams, if we went at it the right way. We have always sold a considerable lot of bacon, but mostly in pound and half-pound lots. Very rarely have we sold a side. Last week I ordered three dozen picnic hams for the week-end. They arrived on Friday morning, and by the middle of Saturday afternoon they were all sold. For this week I ordered four dozen, and I expect to clean them all up by Saturday night."—V. R. Maylor, to a Canadian Grocer representative.

"Simply by talking about them to the customers who come into the store," replied Mr. Maylor. "We place a few on the counter. Then we introduce them to the customers. The attractive appearance and the price have something to do with it. Of course, you are aware that in a small town nearly everyone knows each other, and when a store has something special it does not take long for the news to spread around. Picnic hams are not so expensive as the hams cut from the hind quarter, but the curing and flavor are just as good. About the only difference is, they are cut from the front quarter and perhaps have a little larger bone.

"Another reason why I chose picnic hams for my experiment," continued Mr. Maylor, "is the fact that this town's population is composed to a large extent of retired farmers and we also have a large clientele among farmers. This class, as a general rule, object to paying 45 or 50 cents a pound for a ham when they only get about 14 cents a pound for their live hogs. Picnic hams are cheaper and they are buying them, especially as the flavor is equally as good as the more expensive cuts.

A Good Trade Has Been Built up in Pieces of Bacon, Ends That Have Been Trimmed From the Side of Bacon Before it is Cured, and are Cured Separately.

Selling Pieces of Bacon

"Here is a piece of bacon, that we have also had a splendid sale of," said Mr. Maylor, picking up a piece of bacon about two pounds in weight. "This piece is the end that is trimmed from the side of bacon before it is cured. It is given the same cure as the regular bacon and we buy it at a less price than the regular side bacon that is nicely trimmed. We have a regular trade for them and sometimes a customer will ask to have it sliced, which we do readily on the machine."

The bacon sales in the Maylor store are not all confined to the cheaper cuts, as one might surmise from the above conversation. They sell also a large quantity of breakfast and boneless back bacon, but usually sliced on the machine.

CATCHING THE ELUSIVE NICKEL

J. B. Merrick, general merchant at Macgregor, Manitoba, has adopted a method of catching nickels and dimes that has rewarded him handsomely for some years. Briefly, the method is to place conspicuously on the counter where customers made their purchases a small glass show case containing three glass shelves for the display of chocolate bars, chewing gum, stick candy and samples of various other kinds of candy.

The "bait" is always ready, and so plentiful are the sales that the case is being constantly refilled. Women accompanied by children are especially prone to buy candies when the temptation is so coaxingly put before them.

Refrigerator Display Increases Sales

Much Greater Turnover in Cooked Meats is Reported by Merritt and Beeton, Vancouver, B.C., Since the Installation of a Refrigerator Counter—Products Are Kept in First-class Condition

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, B.C., May 2.—"Much greater sales of cooked meats have resulted since we installed our refrigerator counter," remarked Mr. Beeton, of Merritt and Beeton, this city, to the Pacific coast representative of Canadian Grocer. "All our delicatessen lines are adequately displayed, and at the same time are in first-class condition. It is surprising what it means in the way of sales, and keeping everything in the way of meats and perishables where people can see them is only possible with a refrigerator counter. Cooked meats particularly are very sensitive to quick changes of temperature, and the constant moving of them from an ice box to a counter is not good for them, and this is all avoided with a refrigerator counter."

Cleanliness Important

Merritt and Beeton believe in having all their stock kept free from contamination, and in that regard pay strict attention to cleanliness. Recently they have had constructed three galvanized compartments that fit into three deep shelves. The front of each bin is hinged at the top, and in these metal compartments are kept the cereals, meal and small sacks of flour. The larger sacks of flour and meal are kept neatly piled on a deal table, with a metal top that extends four inches beyond the legs. The shelving in the Merritt and Beeton store is quite deep, lending itself very readily to good arrangement.

Every Labor Saving Device

The Merritt and Beeton store is equipped with every labor saving device. Mr. Merritt spoke particularly of his credit system. "It gives me a great deal of satisfaction to have all my accounts in a fireproof place, and to know that our records are safe," he stated.

Few Eggs Being Sold in Regina For Cold Storage

Regina, Sask., May 6—A very unusual state of affairs is developing in the Saskatchewan egg market. Practically all the demand this spring is local and the result is that few eggs are being sold for cold storage purposes. As a result of this, the farmers are eating more eggs than ever. They do not consider it worth while marketing them at present prices. There is no demand from British Columbia this year, while last spring large orders were received. The new egg regulations governing candling are also having a considerable effect on the industry, some of the wholesalers not handling the "hen fruit" at all because their plants are not equipped for candling eggs in large quantities. Eggs are now selling in Regina wholesale at 25 cents a dozen. At this time last year they were selling for 47 cents.

NEW COMPANY WILL TAKE OVER PACKING PLANT AT LONDON

London, Ont.—Men in the trade here are much interested in a company which is being formed to take over and operate the old plant of the Canadian Packing Co. at London Junction. According to information given to Canadian Grocer a charter is being applied for by the Detroit and Windsor men and a new organization with $100,000 capital will take over the plant and carry on a general packing business. H. M. Todd, of Windsor, representing those interested, is in the city at the present time and is directing operations.

Window display of canned fish arranged by Merritt & Beeton, Vancouver, B.C. The outstanding feature of this window is the contents of the tins shown on plates which permits the possible purchaser to see the goods. The whole display is attractive and bound to catch the eye of the passerby.

Doubles Sales of Cooked Meats

Griffith Bros., Weston, Ont., Believe That a Refrigerator Counter With Its Advantages of Display Will Do Much to Stimulate Sales —Display An Important Feature in the Griffin Store

"THAT refrigerator counter just doubled our sales of cooked meats last summer," remarked Mr. Griffith, of Griffith Bros., Weston, Ont., to a representative of Canadian Grocer recently, in answer to a query as to the value of the same in his business. "It was only installed last spring," continued Mr. Griffith, "and in the period since then, it certainly has meant a great deal in the way of increased business. Last summer we sold as many as four cooked hams a day, the average per week being 20 large hams. In addition to the sales of boiled ham, our turnover in roast hams was about half as many as the boiled. Pressed meats and head cheese also showed an increase, and I believe the fact that we can show them to such fine advantage in a refrigerator counter is responsible for the gain in sales. We sold one brand of corned beef, and in spite of our large volume of business in other cooked lines, we sold from twenty-five to thirty cases of this particular corned beef. We kept it displayed all the time. A very attractive display sign, advertising this beef was used on the top of the counter, and I believe it was very effective in helping sales."

Heavy Sales of Sausages

Sales of sausages in the Griffith store are also very heavy, and total as high as five hundred pounds weekly. Griffith Bros. only handle one line of sausages, and as is indicated by their large turnover, they have built up a very great demand for them. Griffith Bros.' sales of sausages constitute a very gratifying aspect of their meat business.

"We had no trouble with meats all last summer," remarked Mr. Griffith. "We kept the counter at 35 degrees throughout the season. To get the best results from the refrigerator we were told when we purchased it, that we would have to use both salt and ice. We have just used ice, and have been able to maintain a uniform temperature."

Doubles Trade in Groceries

Griffith Bros. have a combination grocery and butcher business in Weston. On one side of the store is the meat section, and on the other is the grocery department. This firm first conducted a meat trade for many years, and it is only two years since they added their grocery department. The latter has been fitted with convenient equipment, such as patented bins, up-to-date counters, computing scales, etc. "I don't know how men in the grocery business get along without these bins," added Mr. Griffith when commenting on his department. "They are a great convenience."

"We went into the grocery business because so many people when giving orders for their meats wanted to give orders for groceries too. Our grocery business has more than doubled in the last year, and we certainly are well satisfied since starting this department. The two businesses can be conducted very well together, and the additional expense is not heavy."

Displays Increase Sales

Griffith Bros. are firmly convinced of the great help of display in the way of increasing sales. A visit to their store will soon convince one of this fact. A splendid feature in this connection is the long table down the centre of the store for fruits. Here are shown the oranges, lemons and grapefruit. It affords a splendid display, both on the top of the table, and the compartments underneath. "We sell from ten to twelve cases of oranges weekly, when the oranges are at their best. There is a period when oranges do not move so quickly, but in the winter and spring months they are good sellers. We always keep them well displayed on this table, and undoubtedly it means much to their sale. We usually handle the cases of 176's.

"We also keep our windows dressed all the time, and they are constantly being changed. One is used for meats and kindred lines, while in the other one are shown groceries."

Sell Only for Cash

Commencing the first of January, 1921, Griffith Bros. are doing an absolutely cash trade. It has been their policy in the past to give a certain amount of credit, but this they have decided to eliminate. They have been gradually cutting down on it, and believe that a wiser and a better policy, particularly at this time, is to sell for cash only. Every salesman in the Griffith store will be expected to exert every selling effort in the current year, and Mr. Griffith states that a big endeavor will be made to increase sales of particular lines from week to week. Griffith Bros. employ a staff of from four to six salesmen.

Sells all His Fish From the Basement of His Store

SHERBROOKE Que., May 3. —It may be interesting to the grocery trade to know how a Sherbrooke grocer, F. P. Houlahan, sells over three hundred pounds of fresh fish in two days of every week and still on the other four days there is no sign of fish in the store, nor would the casual observer see where or how the fish is sold. Nevertheless, the fish is sold regularly every week. The profit is made, and there is no sign of the fish trade or any odor of fish in the grocery store. In fact, the fish department consists of a part of the store that otherwise would not be used at all.

"Every Friday the clerks bear in mind it is 'fish day.' In fact Thursday is fish day as far as the sale is concerned, and on those two days every effort is put forward until all the fish is sold. When a new customer buys fish, the clerk makes a note of the fact and also of the name. The following week this customer is called up and notified that there is a good supply of fresh fish in stock. We endeavor to get the people in the habit of placing their orders for fish with us."

Stored in Vats

Every Thursday Mr. Houlahan gets a shipment of fresh sea fish, haddock, cod and halibut. He chooses to confine his trade to these three lines, yet every week he orders at least three hundred pounds of fish. This is kept in vats in the basement of the store, packed in ice until it is cut. That night one of the clerks cuts the halibut and cod into slices and steaks, leaving some of the cod in pieces large enough for boiling. It is then put back on the ice until the next morning.

Most of It on Order

Most of the fish is on order, so that the next morning the man in charge of the fish department weighs out the orders, wraps up the fish, and it is ready for early delivery on Friday. As there is a fish-table, scales and all equipment for handling fish in the basement of the store, practically the whole fish business is carried on below the main grocery store. The man who looks after the fish department gives his whole attention to it during the two days it is in stock, and for that reason no taint of fish is carried to the other goods.

Building Up the Business

When asked by a representative of Canadian Grocer for an explanation of the system by which he is able to turn over three hundred pounds of fish every week without making any particular display of the fish, F. P. Houlahan said: "Naturally the explanation is that we have developed the trade in fish and cultivated a regular demand on which we may count. By far the biggest part of the fish is on order when it arrives. It only requires slicing, parcelling and delivering. The remaining part we slice up, and display it in the glass-fronted refrigerator in the store.

Getting New Customers

"Every Friday the clerks bear in mind the fact that it is 'fish day.' In fact, Thursday is fish day as far as the sale is concerned, and on these two days every effort is put forward until all the fish on hand is sold. When a new customer buys fish, the clerk makes a note of the fact, and if the name is known and is not on the regular list, the following week this customer is called up and notified that there is a good supply of fresh fish in stock. The result is that we have quite a list of customers who buy fish from us every week and on whose order we may count. They get the habit of buying the fish from us. Of course, this must always be backed up by the best quality of fish or our whole system would collapse.

Getting a Quick Turnover

"The reason so many grocers are prejudiced against handling fish is on account of the odor or taint that they believe fish gives to the rest of the store. We have overcome this by the mere fact that we have developed the business practically without taking the fish into our store. I can safely say that the whole business is carried on from the basement of the store. We never order any more than we are sure we can handle, yet we spare no effort to increase each week the sales of fish. When Friday night comes the last of the fish is gone. I cannot say that we have found it any harder to handle fish by our present system than any other line in the store, and as we have arranged carefully that there is no loss, we are amply repaid for every effort we put behind its sale.

Good Fish Increases Sales

"There is a big demand for fish in this province at all times of the year, yet by supplying the people with the choicest fish the demand may be surprisingly increased. People, perhaps, do not realize how tasty fresh fish is until they find that they can always procure the very best and have no doubt as to its quality. When that confidence is instilled into the customers it will greatly increase the demand for fish, which the grocer will find very regular, and as a result he will be able to adopt measures such as I have to carry on the business without interfering with the grocery store proper in the slightest degree."

Must Sell Oleo In the Original Packages Only

Merchants handling margarine will be interested in the following regulations in regard to the sale of margarine. It has been pointed out by an inspector of the department of agriculture that some grocers have been selling oleomargarine in quantities smaller than a pound, and in order to do so have cut up original packages. This is contrary to the law. It will be well to keep these regulations in mind when selling oleomargarine:

No person shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale in Canada any oleomargarine manufactured wholly from vegetable oils unless it is so designated upon all labels, brands or other markings.

No person shall manufacture, import into Canada, or shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale any oleomargarine unless the word "oleo" is stamped on the surface of the oleomargarine in capital block letters at least one and one-half inches high and of proportional width.

No person shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale in Canada any oleomargarine unless it is contained in—

(a) The original package which shall bear the official inspection mark of the country of origin, together with the name and address of the manufacturer; or,

(b) A small package wrapped sepa-

Refrigerator counters pay returns in increased sales of meats, according to testimony of grocers who have them in their stores.

Advertising Helps Sales of Produce

R. McGregor, Ltd., Grocers in Ottawa, Ont., Believe That Newspaper Advertising is a Valuable Aid in Increasing Sales—Usually Confines Each Advertisement to the Discussion of One Line Only

R. McGREGOR, Ltd., grocers at 225 Bank Street, Ottawa, Ont., are firm believers in the use of advertising space in newspapers and have made it worth while in the development of their business. They use spaces ranging from five inches deep by three columns wide to small "white on black" cuts about an inch and a half deep and a column wide. An example of the larger spaces is found in the reproduction on this page.

Feature Produce Lines

Produce lines as well as groceries are featured. In bright, interesting style, it usually devotes each advertisement to some one subject, such as that on cheese, as reproduced here. Note the pointed, informative talk "about cheese." It is almost certain to attract attention, and, having attracted it, it is sufficiently interesting to hold it until the entire advertisement is read. No other article is discussed in this advertisement but cheese. The panel in the corner names the various kinds of cheese that are available. The price per pound is given in each instance and here a wide variety of selection is available, from as low as 15 cents per package up to $1.25 per pound.

Sales of Sausages Heavy

Sales of sausages are also on a large scale in the McGregor store and are frequently the subject in the daily advertisements. A reputation for sausages has long been established by the McGregor firm and sales of them each week run into big figures.

Another Advertisement

Another typical advertisement that is worthy of reference, but has not to do particularly with produce, reads like this:

"Don't forget the desserts!

"To maintain human life, a certain amount of food is necessary. The scientist sharps and dietitians will tell you that all that is necessary to sustain human life is a certain amount of proteins, carbohydrates, fats and liquids in proper proportions. These are all provided in the solid, substantial foods—all of which are a part of the list of McGregor's 'good things to eat.'

"But while getting these, don't forget the dainty desserts. These are the things that give zest to the ordinary meal and help finish off with complete satisfaction.

"Here are a few suggestions for desserts."

A List with Prices

Then follows a list, with prices. A "box" contains a reminder that the store pays 2 per cent. for cash, redeeming cash register receipts on this basis. The whole is brightened up and made attractive by an appropriate cut, located in a position to catch the eye and lead the reader right into the text of the ad.

This firm's contribution to the advancement of retail grocery advertising should be found of great interest to those who are studying modern merchandising methods.

Distribution of Government Caught Fish Not Satisfactory

LAST summer the distribution and handling of government caught whitefish was not satisfactory to the retailer. As a rule, each wholesaler has his own list of customers who prefer to buy all their supplies from the one source. This is of course impossible when there is only one distributor for government caught fish in each city. Retailers today demand a certain amount of service which it is impossible for one distributor to give unless his staff and delivery are doubled, and to do this would eat all the profit out of his commission for the handling of the fish.

Last summer Lake Ontario fishermen made several attempts to have the government stop their operations, not because they were afraid of the competition so far as quality is concerned, but because they cannot accept the hazards of the weather and produce whitefish from Lake Ontario to compete with the government stock and make a living.

The government whitefish are taken from a few virgin lakes in Northern Ontario by a few favored fishermen who are in the government employ. They run no risks such as loss of nets and short hauls. These fish were produced in such quantities at a fixed price last summer that they became a regular glut on the market. They were shipped across the line to all parts and brought good prices, then again they were frozen for winter consumption, in fact almost anything possible was done for the purpose of getting rid of them but in doing this they certainly did not serve the purpose for which the government produced them and caused a hard winter for many of the fishermen around Lake Ontario.

This spring there has been a movement on foot and to which all fish dealers are favorably inclined, that is, to have these fish distributed through all the wholesalers, and by doing so both the retailer and consumer will get a better service and receive their fish in a fresher state.

Fresh trout and whitefish are arriving in large quantities and are readily taken

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 4.—The most striking feature of the produce market this week is the demoralized conditions of the butter market. About the middle of last week large supplies of new made butter reached the market and prices suddenly dropped as much as ten cents per pound. Cheese, however, is standing firm. The hog market has again declined on account of the bigger supplies offered with a smaller demand. There is no change in the market for smoked or cooked meats, both of which are experiencing an improved demand. Eggs have also declined in price with as big a supply as ever but a smaller demand since a number of buyers have ceased packing. Lard is still in an unsettled condition. The first supplies of fresh lake fish of any size are on the market. Haddock is offered in better supply. There is no change in barrelled meats.

Butter Drops 13 Cents

Montreal.

BUTTER—The butter market has been very erratic during the week and somewhat demoralized, which is attributed to the sudden increase in supplies of fresh made butter offered. Together with this there is a depressed condition of the market in the United States, which influence is felt on this side of the border. On Monday last the market showed stronger tendencies with an increase in the quotations but prices soon dropped to a level which showed a net decline for the week of from 13 to 14¾ cents per pound, which price is about 22 cents below the quotations of the same date last year. Prints of the best creamery butter are quoted at 42 cents a pound, a decline of 7 cents per pound on the quotations of a week ago.

Eggs Further Decline

Montreal.

EGGS—Owing to the continued heavy production of eggs and to the fact that many buyers have ceased purchasing for storage purposes, the egg market has weakened and there has been a decline of two cents per dozen during the week. The undertone to the market is weak and buyers are looking for a still lower price with every expectation that the production will continue as good as it has been. From 36 to 37 cents per dozen is quoted on fresh eggs this week.

Montreal.

CHEESE—There is no change in the cheese market as far as the local trade is concerned. There is a good demand for cheese for export and prices are steady. The opening of navigation has caused a new movement of cheese for export trade and a consequent call for supplies to replenish local stocks. This has tended to strengthen the market while other dairy lines show weakness.

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS—Live hogs weighed off cars show a decline of 50 cents per hundred on the price quoted one week ago. ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 4.—The feature of the produce and provision markets is the drastic decline in butter which was recorded since we went to press last week. The butter market continues weak and further declines seem inevitable. Eggs are also in a weak position with quotations lower. Live hogs are lower with reductions on pork cuts. Butcher cattle are easier but dressed beef shows little change. Smoked bacon, dry salt meats and barrel meats all show declines. Smoked hams and cooked meats are unchanged. Shortening has a firmer tendency but lard is quoted lower with easier tendencies. Cheese is in an easy position with a tendency for lower prices. Margarine is quoted lower under a quiet demand. Fresh lake trout is marked lower under heavier shipments.

Butter Drops Ten Cents

Toronto.

BUTTER—A sensational drop of 10 cents per pound on butter was recorded since our last report. The butter market has been in a weak position for some weeks past but no such drastic decline as this was expected. Lower prices were expected but it was generally conceded that the decline would come gradually. The market continues weak and further declines seem possible. One butter man stated that he would not be surprised to see butter go as low as 30 cents per pound. Fresh made creamery is quoted at 50 cents and No. 2 grades range from 38 cents to 45 cents.

Hog Market Down

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS—Prices on live hogs were again reduced 50 cents per hundred during the week under review. Receipts of hogs at the abattoirs have not been heavy but packers state that they have been sufficient to meet local demand, which appears to be practically the only demand at the present time as little export trade is being done. Butcher cattle have been in fairly heavy receipts and values are lower. Canadian lambs are rather scarce but heavy shipments have been arriving from the United States, with the market holding fairly steady. Fresh pork cuts are all down from one to two cents per pound but little change has occurred in other dressed meats.

Bacon Prices Reduced

Toronto.

PROVISIONS—Smoked bacon is reduced 1½ cents per pound. This decline is attributed to the lower hog market. Hams, however, are unchanged and no change is expected as packers are trying to reserve their hams in anticipation of the heavy demand for cooked hams during the summer season. Dry salt meats are down one cent per pound and barrel meats are also reduced.

If Your Customer's Bird Lives That Means More Sales for You

So, as a strictly business proposition, you should see that your customer's bird does live — and the easiest way to see that it lives is to make sure he gets nothing but Cottam's Bird Seed.

COTTAM'S BIRD SEED

has kept birds alive, well and singing for a generation. It is scientifically prepared by bird experts who know every need of the bird.

The canary colored Cottam carton is known in every household where a bird cage hangs.

GROCERS OF CANADA

Some members of Parliament are trying to force through legislation in Ottawa to allow adulteration of Maple Products.

You are all aware of the struggle that those who are interested in trying to keep our Maple Products pure have had in the past.

Why should the Government allow unscrupulous manufacturers and dealers to spoil the good name that Canada enjoys in all parts of the world from its pure Maple Products?

Grocers of Canada, it is up to you to protect your own interests by writing to the Government at Ottawa protesting against such legislation, or interview your own local member and have him stand firm on this vital question. Parliament must stand firm on the quality of our Maple Products as quality remains long after price is forgotten. Do your duty—and do it now.

"The Spectre"

By Guy Morton

"LONGREEN was not a quibbler.

"'I am sorry, Grimley' — he came straight to the point—'but we are compelled to dispense with your services at the end of the month. Turner's for the past six months has been having a terrible pull. We got overstocked on the rising market and now, with the market falling every day and getting more and more into the customers' hands, we have to retrench or crash. We have chosen to retrench. Every stick of decorative employment is being cut out of the store. . . .'"

What Spectre? The Spectre of Unemployment—a spectre which all too many have encountered during the past few months. If you have not personally encountered this spectre, so graphically described in its causes and consequences by Guy Morton, you may count yourself amongst the fortunate, but there will be no doubt as to your interest in his story. If you have encountered it, nothing can stop you, once you start this story, from reading it to its unusual and constructive conclusion.

It is a great piece of fiction, told by the same author who wrote "Personality Plus" in the March 15th MacLean's.

Money-Saving Information

"The most useful information contained in any paper I get"—so a Western banker writes in to-day's mail, renewing his subscription for FINANCIAL POST.

"Very often," his letter goes on to say, "I am called on to suggest investments for small amounts, sometimes as low as a few hundreds, and I find your Investors' Inquiry Service a reliable partner to consult. If every investor knew there was such service at his call it would surely lessen the losses of many of these people."

The Investors' Inquiry Service fills just that need. Unless you are perfectly sure of your investments write us before you buy.

It costs FINANCIAL POST subscribers nothing to be sure before placing hard-earned savings in stocks that may never have a chance of paying dividends. Trained service men will give you the benefit of keen analysis based on the facts behind the securities you are considering. This is one of many features enjoyed by our readers.

COFFEE LOOKS HIGHER

An importer of coffee stated to Canadian Grocer: "Those buying coffee now at to-day's levels cannot fail to experience a market reaction that will be to their benefit before the year is out. Prices are lower than justified. When we consider that consumption is increasing both on this continent and Europe, and that production has decreased by reason of the weak producers succumbing to hard financial stresses, one cannot conclude other than that coffee will be higher. A large element of speculation is always present in the coffee market and to-day's prices for futures are very attractive buying to the speculator. More operators will speculate in coffee from now on and the more who do, the surer we ing to hard financial will prevail."

PREDICTS NO DECLINE IN RAISINS

Chaddock & Co., of Fresno, Calif., one of the independent raisin packers, say: "In talking with officials of the California Associated Raisin Company, we are firmly convinced that it is going to be their policy to hold present prices until about the time the new crop is ready for shipment to the markets. Some of the trade feared a reduction in prices by the Association, but with a tremendous shortening of the crop we feel convinced that they have made up their minds to hold firm on their prices and that no concessions will be made."

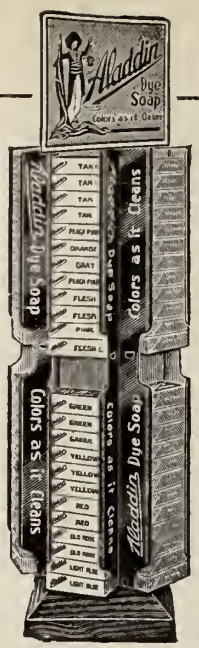
Selling Simplified



Selling Aladdin Dye Soap is simplicity itself. The handsome revolving Display Stand deserves part of the credit for this. It attracts the customer's attention to the striking array of Aladdin's 18 beautiful colors. It arouses interest—in many cases it really makes the sale.

An extensive Advertising Campaign (of Posters, Street Car Cards, and Window Cards) keeps Aladdin constantly before the public, ensuring a steady demand, quick turnover and good profit for all who stock it.

(The Display Stand is free with a one-gross order of Aladdin Dye Soap.

CASCADE'S Exquisite Flavour

Sound commonsense will dictate to you, Sir, that this is no time or season to flirt with indifferent quality. The housewife knows "CASCADE" for a Safe brand because of its uniform and exquisite flavour. Every can is filled with selected Pink Salmon. Stay with the brand your customer likes best. Here's a good one:

SALMON CROQUETTES

One can pink Cascade Salmon, one-half cup of milk, one tablespoonful of flour, one egg; come to a boil until thick; a little lemon juice; roll in crumbs and fry in hot lard.

The recognized nutritive food value of "CASCADE" and its relative cheapness, have made it most popular in every province in the Dominion. Show the Housewife the above recipe.

She will like it.

Appearances Count Mightily

The successful dealer is the one who makes his store a shining example of neatness. He is every bit as jealous of the appearance of his goods as of their quality.

Imperial Floor Dressing aids the tidy storekeeper. It keeps down 90% of the atmospheric dust which is directly responsible for that undesirable, shop-worn appearance that repels the buying public.

Imperial Floor Dressing does more than reduce dust. It brightens floors and fixtures and gives them a like-new appearance that sells goods. It is the ideal cleaner and preservative for wood, linoleum or oil cloth.

One gallon of Imperial Floor Dressing is sufficient for treating upwards of 700 square feet. It does not gum or evaporate, consequently one application will last for weeks.

You will appreciate the sanitary, dust-killing qualities of Imperial Floor Dressing in your own place of business. It is also a profitable line for the dealer to stock.

Imperial Floor Dressing comes in one and four-gallon lithographed sealed cans, and in half-barrels and barrels. Ask the Imperial Oil salesman for prices and a demonstration.

And Now—
Toronto Printers May Strike

THE present agreement between printers in book and job offices and employers in Toronto expires May 31. The minimum wage paid is $35.20 per week (increased voluntarily a year ago by the employers from $32.00, although the agreement had a year then to run). This wage covers a 48-hour week.

The International Union is demanding a week of 44 hours as the basis for all wage scales, and the Toronto unions are demanding a wage of $44.00 per week of 44 hours, $8.80 more per week for 4 hours less work.

This means an increase from 73 cents per hour to $1.00 per hour, or over 36%.

Publishers and other employing printers feel that under present conditions of business and the admitted decreasing cost of living, the increased wages and shorter hours demanded by the International Union are unreasonable.

This is acknowledged by many of the thoughtful, loyal printers employed in the Toronto offices, who believe that the International Union has blundered in its demand that local unions shall not sign new agreements except on the basis of the 44-hour week.

The position, however, may be that these local men may not be able to make the International officers in Indianapolis see that to force a strike now on these unreasonable demands would be an act of folly—and a strike may be called on June 1st.

The facts of the case are presented here, for the information of the sections of the public—subscriber and advertiser—reached by this publication.

The attitude of the employing printers is shown by their voluntary action in giving a 10 per cent. increase last year while the agreement calling for the minimum wage of $32.00 a week had still a year to run.

They feel strongly now, however, that this is not a time when an increase of 36 per cent. in the labor cost of production should be permitted.

If publishers are forced to pay $44.00 a week instead of $35.20 and get only 44 hours of work instead of 48, it is inevitable that subscription and advertising rates must advance. No business can stand an increase in its wage bill of 36 per cent. and absorb that increase. The extra cost will have to be added to the sale price of the product.

Publishers sincerely hope that the great body of sane opinion among the local printers may prevail and that the Indianapolis officials will be induced to withdraw their unreasonable demands so that Toronto printers may continue to find well-paid, congenial employment.

If this sane, thoughtful opinion does not prevail, a strike seems inevitable, with its equally inevitable result of loss to the printers and publishers, and inconvenience and loss to the public.

An expression of the opinion of readers of this paper on the Union's proposals, involving an increase of 36% in the labor cost of printed matter, is asked. Will you not write a letter to the editor (not for publication) telling him your view of the situation?

This statement is published by and has received the endorsation of the Toronto publishers who are members of the

For Less Service— A Lower Rate

Heretofore, when you asked the long distance operator to connect you with a distant telephone, even though you said to her, "Anyone at that number will do," you paid the same rate as if you had specified a particular person.

Now, a rate is in effect for this type of call ("Station-to-Station" service), which is lower than for calls where a particular person is wanted. The operating cost and use of circuits involved in handling a call for a particular person are much greater than for a message where the calling party will talk with anyone who answers the distant telephone.

It is a real economy, when placing long distance calls, to say whenever possible, "Anyone at that number will do."

How much money do you suppose the tea pedlar has invested in his business compared with you? Yet he travels up and down your district, taking away a business you spent years to establish.

Did it ever occur to you that you unconsciously help him, in many ways, in selling bulk teas, for instance? This is one of the pedlar's best talking points with your customers; that he sells them the same bulk tea as you do, and often cheaper at that. Just now, when so many people are complaining that the bulk tea they are getting is poor quality, don't you think it is the very time to sell your customers a different tea—a tea that they know to be good?

You know RED ROSE TEA is a good tea, none better. You can win out against the pedlar if you will sell RED ROSE TEA.

Wouldn't it be a good plan to consider these points? Talk them over with our traveler the next time he calls.

Sales Tax is Increased 50 Per Cent

Sir Henry Drayton Brings Down His New Budget—Business Profits Tax and Balance of Luxury Taxes Are Abolished—Important Changes in Customs Regulations

ACCORDING to the budget just brought down in the Dominion Parliament by Finance Minister Sir Henry Drayton, the sales tax that has been in operation now for the past year is increased, but still confined to sales by manufacturers, wholesalers, jobbers and importers. It is increased from 1 and 2 per cent, on domestic transactions to 1½ and 3 per cent., and on imports from 1½ and 3 per cent. to 2 and 4 per cent.

The luxury tax is now entirely abolished, the remaining tax of 10 per cent. on confectionery being wiped out.

The business profits tax is also done away with.

The features in the budget announcement are the changes made in the Customs Act. The act heretofore provided "that the value shall be the fair market value, when sold for home consumption, in the principal markets of the country whence and at the time when the goods were exported directly to Canada." The amendment will add to this "such value in no case to be lower than the wholesale price thereof at such time and place," and in addition provides that the value for duty shall not be less than the actual cost of production of similar goods at date of shipment direct to Canada, plus a reasonable profit thereon.

The other amendment relates to the valuation for customs purposes of foreign currencies. The present Customs practice is to convert the foreign depreciated currency into Canadian, on the basis of existing exchange rates. It is proposed that no reduction in excess of 50 per cent. of the standard or proclaimed value will be allowed, no matter what the exchange rate is. Where the rate of exchange is adverse to Canada, the value for duty will be computed at the rate of exchange existing at the date of the shipment of the goods.

Every imported article must have the country of origin plainly stamped upon it.

Several articles of food that previously were exempt from the sales tax are now subject to the tax of 1½ per cent. Wholesale grocers will add this tax on flour in packages containing up to 48 pounds. Quantities over that amount are still exempt. Oatmeal in packages of similar amounts is affected in the same way.

All canned goods, including condensed and evaporated milk are now taxable, under the new scheme, being subject to the 1½ per cent.

Other lines affected in this levying of 1½ per cent. tax by the wholesaler, and which were previously exempt are coffee, corn starch, dried and evaporated fruits, klim, macaroni, vermicelli, maple products, rice, sago, tapioca, salt, starch, soups, syrups, teas, jams, marmalade, jellies, yeast, smoked, pickled and dried meats.

Sugar is still exempt from any tax, as are all foodstuffs in their natural state, initial sales of farm produce by the farmer of his own production, and the first products of fisheries.

According to J. H. Bertram, Collector of Customs for the port of Toronto, the amendment providing for a depreciation on foreign moneys is chiefly aimed at Germany, and the shutting out of German-made goods.

Such an amendment practically means that German goods would be prohibitive on this market, C. B. Watt, of Watt & Scott, importers, Front Street East, Toronto, told a representative of Canadian Grocer.

Citing an example, Mr. Watt showed how the duty on German goods will be many times what it has previously been. An article costing one hundred marks in Germany would have previously cost in Canadian money $1.75, the German mark being worth at the present time 1¾ cents. But the par value of the German mark is 23½ cents. Consequently under the new amendment, the Government levies 50 per cent. or 11¼ cents for every German mark. Thus this article worth 100 marks in Germany would now cost $11.25 laid down in Canada.

Goods from Italy are also affected but not to the same extent as from Germany, Mr. Watt pointed out. The Italian lire is to-day worth only 5¾ cents in Canadian currency, whereas its par value is 19.30. It is easily apparent that it is under 50 per cent. of its par value, the value for duty being 9.65.

Similarly goods from France and Bel-

WILL NOT GO INTO EFFECT IMMEDIATELY

Ottawa, May 10—(Special)—It being understood that in some parts of Canada certain Customs officials have interpreted the declaration of Sir Henry Drayton, in the Budget address with regard to the method of determining the exchange value of foreign currencies for Customs purposes, as going into effect immediately, it is well to make it plain that this is not the case.

A bill will have to be introduced into the House of Commons by the Finance Minister, and the new method of determining the value of currency for duty purposes will not go into effect until after that passes or on the date set by it. The same thing is true of provisions introduced to make the anti-dumping law more effective, though in this regard the bill will only state definitely what has been for many years the interpretation of Customs officials of existing law.

On September 1 all imported goods must bear the name of country of origin plainly marked.

These are the exceptions to the tax provisions which went into effect immediately.

gium will also be taxed, but not to the same extent as these other countries mentioned. At to-day's figure the French franc, with a par value of 19.30 cents, is worth 8.15 cents in Canada, but the lowest values the Customs department would place on it would be 50 per cent. of the par value or 9.65—a difference of only 1.5 cents, as compared with a difference of 11.25 cents in the case of German marks.

Belgian francs with a par value of 19.30 cents are now worth 8.28. For duty purposes they would be valued at 9.65, an advance of 1.37 cents.

A point well to be remembered in this new amendment affecting exchange is that the duty is so levied, only where the basis is ad valorem. Mr. Watt and other large importers in Toronto interpret it to mean only on the value of goods and not where there is a specific duty.

A large number of the imported foodstuffs are subject to a specific duty, that is the duty is reckoned at so much per pound, or at so much per gallon. Quantity is the basis and not the value.

Some grocery lines that are subject to an ad valorem duty are biscuits, certain polishing soaps, breakfast foods, brooms of all kinds, candy, glaced fruits such as cherries, and chewing gum.

Such imported lines as canned goods, raisins, walnuts, in fact all kinds of nuts, currants, are subject to a specific duty and additional duty on exchange is not affixed.

As far as imports from Great Britain are concerned, the amendment will have no effect since exchange value of the English pound is far above 50 per cent. of its par value.

Of course from now on the duty on goods coming from the United States will be figured on the actual par value in the United States plus the exchange on the day of shipment. For instance, goods valued at $100 in the States will cost laid down here $111, at the current rate of exchange, and the duty will now be reckoned on $111 instead of on $100 as in the past.

A duty of one cent per pound is levied on grapefruit, with the exception of fruit grown in the British West Indies, upon which there is a preferential tariff of 50 cents per hundred pounds. This tariff will increase the price of grapefruit 75 to 80 cents per case, imported from Florida, California and Cuba, and on the West India variety 40 cents per case.

"The placing of the tariff on grapefruit will have a tendency to curtail the consumption," stated W. H. Despard, of White & Co., Ltd., Toronto. "We get practically no grapefruit from the West Indies. I understand some arrives in Halifax, but none of it appears as far inland as Ontario. High freight rates, cost of refrigeration, duty and exchange will make grapefruit a rather expensive article, and I have no doubt but that the consumption will be considerably reduced."

"The changes in the tariff on cocoa should result in more cocoa being consumed in this country," Wm. Robertson, of Robertson Bros., chocolate manufacturers, Toronto, told Canadian Grocer. Cocoa beans, not roasted, crushed or ground, are admitted free from British possessions, while a duty of $1.50 per hundred pounds is imposed on imports from other countries.

"This will encourage buying in British countries," Mr. Robertson stated. "It practically forces Canadian manufacturers to buy only in British possessions, and is a decided advantage too for the confectioner. Cocoanuts also, when imported from British countries are admitted free. Cocoanut dessicated, sweetened or not, has a British preferential tariff of five cents per pound, as compared with six cents on shipments from other countries."

Preparations of cocoa or chocolate in powder form from Great Britain have a duty of 27½ per cent., as against 35 per cent. on shipments from other countries.

Merchants who import direct will have practically no advantage over the merchant who purchases through the wholesale. The tax merchants importing direct have to pay is a straight 4 per cent., but wholesalers are required to pay 2½ per cent. to the customs and then add another 1½ per cent. to the invoice when the goods are sold to the retail merchant. As an example: A merchant imports direct a bill of goods to the value of $40.00, to this is added 4 per cent. sales tax or $1.60. Buying through the wholesaler the same bill of goods, the wholesaler pays the customs 2½ per cent. and adds another 1½ per cent. when reselling to the retail mer-

Both Retailers' and Wholesalers' Associations Approve of Budget

"It is in Accordance With the Representations We Have Made," say Both W. C. Miller, of Retail Merchants' Association, and A. C. Pyke, of Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association

"FROM the retailers' standpoint the budget announcement complies with our requests to the Finance Minister," W. C. Miller, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "We have nothing to kick about, now that the luxury tax has been done away with, and with the removal of the ten per cent. tax on confectionery, it is entirely eliminated. I think the increasing of the sales tax is a good thing, and the fact that it is being collected at the source is wiping out the stigma of a tax, unpleasant to the retailer, and rendering it difficult for him to do business. The tax will now be absorbed where it always should have been, and the Retail Merchants' Association is delighted that its representations have been considered. The government in this present method will raise as much revenue, and considerably more economically. The retailers as a whole view this change in the method of taxation with approval and believe that it will work out for the good of all."

Wholesalers, Too, Approve

A. C. Pyke, secretary of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, speaking for the wholesalers, had no complaint to make against the budget. "It is heartily in accord with the ideas of the wholesale grocers," he told Canadian Grocer. "It is what we have all along advocated, and we believe that it will work out to the best possible advantage. The wholesaler will now have to pay 1½ per cent. on Canadian manufactured goods, and 2½ per cent. on imported goods. In the case of retailers and consumers buying direct they must pay two per cent. on Canadian goods, and four per cent. on imported goods. Under the present method the tax will be collected more economically, and more easily than any general turnover tax. Placing the tax at the source, as has been done, finds unanimous approval among the wholesale grocery trade."

chant, which makes a total tax of $1.62. This shows that the merchant who imports direct will have a slight advantage over the merchant who buys his import articles through the wholesaler, but the advantage is really negligible.

The sales tax shall not apply to sales or importations of: bread; flour and oatmeal, when in packages weighing not less than 8 pounds each; animals living; live poultry; meats and poultry, fresh; milk, including buttermilk; cream; butter; cheese; oleomargarine, margarine, butterine and other substitutes for butter; lard, lard compound and similar substances made from animal or vegetable stearine or oils; eggs; vegetables, fruits, grains and seeds in their natural state; hay; straw; hops; nursery stock; chicory, raw or green; bees; honey; sugar; molasses; other farm produce sold by the individual farmer of his own production; ice; fish and products thereof not canned or medicated; materials for use solely in the manufacture of oleomargarine or any substitute for butter or lard or for the production of cottolene.

"The method of collecting the Sales Tax is certainly very fair," stated George Gibbon, of Campbell & Gibbon, Port Arthur. "It simplifies matters a great deal and will permit the retailer to apply the tax to the cost of the goods. The wholesaler can, if he desires, absorb the tax and just charge the retailer so much for the goods. This is a better method because the retailer, just having one price before him, is in the better position to add the tax to the cost of the goods. There is one thing that the merchant will have to watch, and that is in getting quotations to make sure whether the price quoted includes the tax or not, as some wholesalers will very likely continue to use the old method of making a separate item on the invoice of the Sales Tax."

"The sales tax is really the basis on which taxation will affect the consumer the least," remarked an official of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. "The manufacturer does not absorb it, and by showing it separately on his invoice no advance is added to it. The sales tax is working very satisfactorily indeed, and its continuation will be satisfactory to wholesaler and manufacturer. The change in connection with the dumping clause is only fair to the Canadian manufacturer, and will prevent a lot of goods being dumped here at less than cost of manufacture in the country of origin. The new clause will also prevent slaughter or distress prices on imported goods, a most desirable effect."

"It is certainly going to add to the cost of foodstuffs subject to the sales tax," George Barrons, of Barrons, Ltd., Yonge street, Toronto, told Canadian Grocer. "If we have to pay three per cent. on goods we buy direct from the Canadian manufacturer and four per cent. on goods imported we certainly are going to add it to the cost of the article and the consumer will have to pay it. Our prices have not been changed any as yet. We are a little at sea in regard to this tax as yet, and haven't really got down to the study of it. However, if there is an increase in the sales tax it certainly will have to be added to the prices of goods."

G. T. Wolfe, manager of the grocery department of the T. Eaton Co., Toronto, stated that no changes had been made in prices in their department as yet because of the increase in the tax. "We buy a good deal of goods direct and now must pay three per cent. on Canadian-made goods and four per cent. on imports. That certainly will mean higher prices on lines affected. I haven't gone into the matter carefully as yet, but certainly the tax will have to go on to the cost of the goods, and in turn to the consumer."

Hugh Blain, president of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, stated that the increase in the sales tax was about what he had expected and that, in his opinion, it would work out all right. Personally, he would prefer the imposition of one tax on the manufacturer at the point of production, but, in the absence of this, he believed the Government had adopted the next best thing.

"The tax must, of necessity, stiffen prices a little," said Mr. Blain, "but with values dropping as they have been, the consumer will not feel this as he would on a rising market. I don't know of any fairer way to impose the tax, apart from the one I have mentioned, and I consider the results should be quite satisfactory."

Mr. Blain added, however, that he didn't quite see why the tax on imported goods should be raised more than on domestic goods. It would mean giving a little more protection to home goods, but the effect would not be pronounced. Prices of groceries, he pointed out, will be little affected by the changes as, being food products, there are a great many free of the tax.

"Removal of Luxury Tax Will Mean a Revival of Trade"

William Robertson, of Robertson Bros., Toronto, Believes That the Elimination of the Ten Per Cent. Tax on Candy Will Help Business—Prices Are Already Lower

"OF course there is only one opinion in regard to the removal of the ten per cent. luxury tax on confectionery," C. J. Bodley, secretary of the Confectioners' Association, told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "That is an opinion of general approval."

"Do you look for any decline in the price of candy?" Canadian Grocer asked.

"Of course the one-cent and five-cent lines have not been affected by the luxury tax and any change in the price of them is not looked for, but in the bulk chocolates and box candy the removal of the ten per cent. tax should result in lower prices to that extent. Manufacturers have been adding that ten per cent. to their higher priced lines and of course now that it has been done away with the public should immediately benefit."

Confectionery manufacturers look upon the changes in the sales tax regulations favorably and believe that the present method of collection will be much more satisfactory. The imposition of the ten per cent. luxury tax was strenuously opposed by confectionery men.

"We look for a revival of trade in confectionery now that the luxury tax is off," William Robertson, of Robertson Bros., Queen Street East, told Canadian Grocer. "We have already lowered our prices to the extent of this ten per cent."

Some manufacturers of confections claim that the increasing of the sales tax to three per cent. on sales direct to the retail trade is an unfair advantage to the wholesaler or jobber, but Mr. Robertson believes that while it may appear to be an advantage, it could not be worked out otherwise. The tendency of a great many jobbers was to absorb this tax and not to show it all on the invoice. It was not compulsory to show it, but it was the intention of Mr. Robertson's firm to show this tax on all invoices.

Would Like Canned Goods Exempt

Montreal Dealers Seek Specific Ruling on Canned Goods But Present Indications Point to Canned Goods Being Subject to the Sales Tax—Will Stabilize the Sugar Market

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL, May 11.—(Special)—The new government budget has created some surprise among the grocery trade. As it did a year ago it has caused bewilderment to manufacturers, wholesalers and jobbers in this city as to the scope of the new ruling. Two instances, vital to the grocery trade, stand out where the new legislation is both unexpected and indefinite. The first of these is with regard to the sales tax on canned vegetables, and the second is the tax on canned and prepared fish. Fish and all by-products of fish and canned vegetables were on the exemption list last year. According to the present reading of the budget it appears that it is the intention of the government to tax both of these lines.

Report Incomplete

J. H. Magor, managing director of Magor, Son & Co., asked for his opinion regarding the ruling of the new budget on canned vegetables, said to Canadian Grocer representative: "Last year canned vegetables and infant's food were on the exemption list. It was never expected that the government would revise this list and tax canned vegetables, but this is evidently the case if the early reports of the budget are correct. We have been trying to get an accurate statement in this regard from the government and from the local officials, but so far have been unable to get a more definite ruling than appeared in the early reports. While we hope that it is the intention of the government to exempt canned vegetables, personally I cannot help but feel that it is their intention to levy the tax on this line.

United States Goods Cost More

"Another feature of the budget is that not only is the tax on imported lines from the United States increased, but it is to be levied in such a way that the importers will be paying the tax on the value, not in American dollars, but Canadian dollars. This will materially increase the cost of imported lines from the United States.

Exemptions List Incomplete

"The reports of the budget and its rulings as they have appeared in the press cannot be absolutely complete since the scope of the budget is so large that it is almost impossible to believe that these reports could be completely sent by wire and there has not been time to have them delivered by mail. Even officials here have no more definite data on the budget than appeared in the press. There is therefore reason to believe that some of the exemption lists are incomplete and canned vegetables may yet be included on that list."

Canned Fish Likely Taxed

With regard to the appearance of canned fish on the list of taxed foodstuffs A. H. Brittain, president of the Maritime Fisheries, said it seemed to him that it is the intention of the government to put the sales tax on canned and prepared fish, not because the budget stipulates that it shall be taxed, but because it does not appear on the exemption list as it did last year. "Previously," he said, "all fish and fish products were exempted. It may be that the list is incomplete and as yet we have not had time to get an answer to our enquiries. It is to be hoped, however, that it will be exempt. As we learned last year, early reports are confusing and may be changed or be incomplete. In a few days the trade will get accurate information as to the exact ruling of the budget."

Sugar Market Stabilized

To Canadian Grocer representative, Armand Chaput, managing director of Chaput, Fils & Cie, wholesale grocers, said: "I can but read the press reports of the budget and form my personal opinion, which is no more authentic than the interpretation given it by any other business man. To me it appears that the government needs the money, they have seen fit to abolish some of the taxation and have had to increase other and perhaps expand the taxable list of goods to obtain the revenue. If the list as it appears in the press is complete, then one cannot but understand the canned vegetables, canned fish, and perhaps some other lines which we do not at first think of will be switched from the exempted list to the taxable list. Personally I believe that the two lines mentioned will be taxed. One good feature to the budget that appeals to me is the fact that Canada is going to give more protection to her sugar refineries. To me it seems that the anti-dumping clause will stabilize the sugar market. It is the duty of every citizen to shoulder the burden that the government sees fit to lay before us in order that our debt may be speedily cut down."

Confections Cheaper

"A twenty per cent. drop in the price of all confections should result from the abolition of the luxury tax on confections," said E. Littler, manager of the W. M. Lowney Co., Ltd. "The new budget removes all remaining luxury taxes, and, as the luxury tax on confections was not removed as some others were in December, 1920, it now comes off, making a probable drop of 20 per cent. The tax is only ten per cent., but by the time the retailer has figured out his cost, including the tax and consequent selling price to the consumer, now that the luxury tax is gone, there should be at least a twenty per cent. difference. As the budget has only just been made public the manufacturers are not yet in a position to make any definite statements, but the trade will hear more from the confectionery manufacturers."

Refiners At Sea

The new budget has strengthened up the position of Canadian sugar refineries as far as the stock market is concerned, but the refiners themselves claim to be at sea as to how it will affect them. The manager of one of the refineries said to Canadian Grocer representative that he could not see how, as far as sugar is concerned, the working of the budget will affect the retailer. "We are at sea to understand its scope, that is as regards the anti-dumping clause, and we are trying hard to get a definite ruling from Ottawa. So far, we have nothing new and cannot make any statements."

THE WEEKLY HALF HOLIDAY

IN many cities, towns and villages throughout the Dominion, merchants will be closing one afternoon each week and as in other years Canadian Grocer will again publish a list of the municipalities wherein there is a half holiday each week. It is important that this list be accurate and that every locality be represented as business houses have found this list a valuable one in assisting them to plan the trips of their representatives.

We therefore request merchants to fill in this coupon and return at their earliest convenience.

The Real Wastes in Distribution

How to Prevent Speculative Losses Between the Merchant, Wholesaler, Manufacturer and Consumer—Reductions in Price Brought About by Curtailment of Service Require to be Closely Scanned

By FREDERICK W. NASH, Manager, Food Department, General Chemical Company, in System

WE speak of the process of getting the product from the manufacturer to the ultimate consumer as "distribution," and we rarely stop to consider what, at the present day, this exceedingly wasteful process consists of.

We all agree that it is wasteful, but popular attention is usually directed to surface practices, and, somehow, it is thought that the big wastes are in the last stage of the selling—in the services which the retailer renders to the individual purchaser. Twenty years in the marketing of a number of now rather well-known trade-marked commodities have convinced me that the smallest waste is between the retailer and his customer. The big wastes, the really important wastes, occur between the retailer and the manufacturer.

Let us take some of the more apparent wastes. My experience has been largely with food products, but they are in no case different from any other products which are sold through jobbers and retailers and not directly to the retailer or to the trade. Take, for instance, the question of delivery. One hears everywhere the announcement, as though it were a settled fact, that "cash and carry"—the elimination of the overhead of delivery service and the withdrawal of credit facilities—would result in a drastic cutting of retail prices. This opinion is the result of viewing price only in its nearest aspect.

Can Practice Be Justified?

Take a community with 500 homes, located within an average distance of half a mile from the trading centre. In a "cash and carry" system, we take up the time of those 500 individuals by causing them to travel an aggregate of 500 miles a day in order to save a cost of, at the most, three or four delivery wagons. Such a practice can be justified only on the ground that the time of individuals engaged in housekeeping is absolutely worthless, and that the only price to consider in cost saving is the price at the door of the store, and not the price at the point of use.

Under this theory it would be cheaper for a purchaser to buy an article of furniture at $50, hire his own wagon and transport the article to his home at a cost of $2 rather than to pay $50.50 for the article in the store and then have it delivered without further charge!

I recently saw a dispatch from Rome which said that the Government, in order to reduce the high cost of living, had introduced distributing stations to which people might go for food. And it was stated that, disregarding the purchasers' time in transit, it took an average of seven hours of waiting at the distribution point before a purchase could be made. In the sales of army stores held in and about New York, the average time to make a purchase, excluding the time spent in travelling and excluding the inconveniences of transporting heavy packages, is about two hours. In the case of a sale of army blankets, the average time taken to make the purchase was approximately estimated at a minimum of ten hours. The purchase of these blankets involved the standing in a queue for some hours to give the order, and then a trip to a widely distant point on the next day, and another standing in line, to receive the purchase. The Government was selling only one article and, even if they had perfected their arrangements so that the blankets might have been sold and delivered as quickly as tickets at a movie show—which is not at all an impossible arrangement — the purchasers, in order adequately to estimate the actual price that they paid for the blankets, would have had to count in the value of their time and transportation.

Although it is no part of my thought, in this present article, to criticize the Government's methods, yet the impression has gone abroad that, because the Government disposed of these stocks arbitrarily at prices somewhat lower than the market, the Government can always sell below the market. There is very little comprehension that these goods are being sold for less than was paid for them and that, really, the whole operation is in the nature of a "fire sale," and is in no way a business operation.

The Cash System

Or, take the cash system. The corporation which discounts bills—that is, which pays cash—usually does so because it can borrow from a bank. It finds it profitable to shift creditors. The average individual is in more or less the same position; that is, his receipts cannot be expected always to come to him in advance of his absolutely necessary expenditures for household necessities, and he may not be able to accumulate a reserve sufficient to tide over the intervals. Therefore, he, too, has to have recourse to a banker; but his banker is either his grocer with whom he has established his credit or the loan shark or pawnbroker. The average credit loss in a retail grocery business, according to figures collated by this magazine, amounts to only three-tenths of one per cent. of the volume of business done. To save this three-tenths of one per cent. on the price of the article, as purchased, the poor man is compelled to pay a pawnbroker or a loan shark anywhere from 6 per cent. up to 60 per cent., unless he can depend upon credit at his grocers.

Filling an Economic Need

However, the growth of the chain grocery store operating on the consumer self-service plan undoubtedly indicates the fulfilling of an economic need, especially in large industrial centres, as well as in some smaller towns where a certain portion of the population find it more satisfactory or economical to serve themselves on all the elements that enter into the service grocer's business rather than to be served. Therefore, in fairness to this somewhat new system of grocery distribution, it is only proper to say that such of these institutions as are building their business on a firm foundation of economic usefulness and, with due regard to the rights of others in the trade should receive the exact amount of commendation and consideration to which they are entitled upon their merits as economical or efficient distributors of merchandise.

But reductions in price brought about by the curtailment of service are to be most closely scanned—a large number of them are on a par with the office building which would lower its rent by abolishing the elevator service. And the healthfulness of having an office staff walk up ten or twenty flights of stairs several times a day would probably not be so impressive as the loss in time.

The real loss in distribution comes between the retailer and the manufacturer and is caused by the introduction of the speculative element as the greatest factor in the business of each of them. This results in distracting the merchants' attention from strict merchandising and the economies and profits to be realized from rapidity of turnover, and from the public service of buying and selling only dependable and easily moved lines.

Two Ways of Merchandising

There are two ways of merchandising:

(1) To buy and sell only a trade-marked article of known and guaranteed content, at a price determined by the manufacturer of that article—that is, at a fixed margin of profit. In this case the manufacturer underwrites all the speculation of buying, and the retailer, taking a fixed profit per article, depends for his net profit upon the skill with which he manages his business.

(2) The merchandising of buying cheaply and selling dearly with the ever-present factor with both the jobber and the retailer, that what is thought to be a cheap purchase may turn out to be an expensive one, and the article may have to be sold, on account of a drop in the market, for less than was paid for it.

The element of speculation enters much more largely than anyone imagines into the cost of living. It is a fact that the average jobber does not make his profit at all as a distributor, but as an intermediate speculator. And his prices from day to day are not governed by the ultimate economic factors, but by the exigencies of the local market. If that local market happens to have a nervous temperament (and most of them do) the prices may vary without any regard whatsoever to the real condition. The mere rumor of a shortage sends prices up, the mere rumor of a surplus sends them down. (Although it is human nature more readily to believe the rumors of a shortage and to put up prices, rather than to believe the rumors of a surplus and depress them; the nervous temperament does not work perfectly in both directions.)

Price Rather Than Quality

The inevitable consequence of this practice is that the main inquiry of the buyer must be to price rather than to quality—that is, to immediate rather than to ultimate cost. And the temptation—which varies, of course, according to the nature of the trade served—is to buy a cheap article, regardless of the quality, in the hope that it can be sold as something better than really it is. Speculation is a necessary part of business, but the point to be decided is whether the skill in buying and money power is not so disproportioned as generally to keep prices above, rather than at, the normal level.

For it is the least skilful, and not the most skilful, buyers who make the market. The profit of skill comes from doing business at less cost than the unskilled.

The most marked example of this is in the meat packing industry, in which skill has been very highly developed—developed to such a degree that prices of about all of the packers, the "Big Five" or "independents," are practically the same. This is generally taken by the uninformed as evidence of unlawful combination; yet it is an inevitable result, as must be self-evident, of concentrated skill. The criticism, of course, is that such concentration leads to market control and the arbitrary fixing of prices. This is not true, and for two important reasons. The first is that the raising of a price, even of a necessity, arbitrarily and without regard to conditions—that is, increasing the profit by raising the price—always narrows the market, and more than absorbs the increase in price by the slackening of the rate of turnover. And, second, the world is so big, and in normal times transportation is so efficient, that increasing prices to any considerable degree quickly tap an outside source of supply. No one yet has ever succeeded in cornering a market on an important food stuff without being sharply pinched, or, indeed, ruined in the course of the operation.

The inevitable consequence of this practice of speculation is that the main inquiry of the buyer must be to price rather than to quality—to immediate rather than to ultimate cost. And the temptation—which varies according to the nature of the trade served—is to buy a cheap article, regardless of the quality, in the hope that it may be sold as something better than it really is. Speculation is a necessary part of business, but the point to be decided is whether the skill in buying and money power is not so disproportioned as generally to keep prices above rather than at the normal level.

It is the least skillful and not the most skillful buyers who make the market. The profit of skill comes from doing business at less cost than the unskilled.

The Controlled System

The opposite of the competitive system in marketing is the controlled system in which the manufacturer trade marks his product, guarantees its quality, builds the good will, and then sends it out with a proper selling price stamped on the package, and arranges for fixed prices or standards of compensation in the intermediate stages of distribution for the jobber and for the retailer. The speculative risks are then assumed by the manufacturer, and exactly what he earns, and what everyone else along the line earns, is open to public investigation. Instead of hundreds of thousands of speculators, we reduce the number to thousands and, thereby, minimize the opportunity for gouging and increase the facilities for governmental supervision.

Because the prices of all raw materials and labor must fluctuate, the prices, as fixed by the manufacturer, cannot be settled for all time. But, they can be settled as an average over a period. And, because a change of price is cumbersome, involving new labels and all that, it is the last and not the first thought of the price marking manufacturer. A price intelligently fixed can never be as low as the "sacrifice price"—when goods are sold for less than they cost. But, again, it can never be as high as the highest speculative price.

Fixed Price Lower

A degree of intelligence being used the average fixed price will be lower to the consumer than the average price under the speculative system. But, what is more important than this, the price changes down the line will necessarily be infrequent; and, as everyone in business knows, it is not high or low price levels that make business cautious, but the constant fluttering of prices.

The immediate reaction to the policy of limiting competition on trade-marked products to the manufacturers is the statement that the public will not gain the benefit of price-cutting. This presupposes that the public does gain by price-cutting, that the public gains by having a distributor sell at a loss.

If a human being could be conceived who possessed the inherent ingenuity and resourcefulness always to buy only the goods on which prices were cut, then that individual would surely gain by price-cutting, but he does not exist and could not exist.

The retailer or the jobber who cuts one price must make up by raising another price, so that his general average profit will be about normal.

But here again human nature steps in, and exactly the same motive which leads deliberately to charging less than cost for one article, leads to charging considerably more than a fair price for some other article. If such a plan is not followed and an undue proportion of goods is consistently sold at lower than cost, then that merchant must eventually fail and the consuming public will in the end have to pay in the goods they buy for the bills that merchant did not pay.

Deception in Price Cutting

There is the further objection that price-cutting always gets around to selling on price, regardless of quality, which as a policy must lead to deception and substitution. I am always suspicious of the inherent honesty of any concern which advertises that it is selling anything at less than cost. For such is not the object of business and either they are misrepresenting the price, which is bad enough, or they are misrepresenting the goods, which is still worse. Usually they misrepresent both.

The Federal Trade Commission has discussed this very point. They say: "The consuming public does not enjoy benefits by unfair price-cutting to compensate it for the injuries following demoralization caused by price-cutting. This for the reason that, in the long run, unrestrained price-cutting tends to impair, if not to destroy, the production and distribution of articles desirable to the public.

"There must be a common ground wherein the rights of producer, purveyor and consumer may each be fully secured and equity done to all."

I have always believed that the fairest value is given through putting the emphasis upon quality, trade-marking that quality, and then seeing that the quality never varies. Some years ago, I put a brand of coffee on the market. The company had been known for many years as large producers of cheaper coffee and sugar, but they had not been particularly known for "quality" coffee. There are many, many brands of coffee on the market and the problem at once arose as to whether it would be better to attempt to sell on price or to take the very best coffee which could be had, tell the public all about it and then market that not on price but on quality. My position was that the market was already glutted with cheap coffee, that there was very little room for competition and almost no selling point there, but that the market was always open for something better. For some years the members of the firm had imported a special coffee for their own use. I took that coffee and then marketed on the line of giving something better for the money. The policy has been proved by success.

The Case of Baking Powder

With my present product, which is a baking powder, practically the same question arose. Baking powder is not an important division of a retail grocer's profit. It is something which he has to carry, but it is not something which his customers consume in any very large quantity. It is very easy for him to overbuy and take six months instead of sixty days to turn over his stock. Comparatively speaking, few brands are on the market, for it is an expensive product to introduce and nearly all of the brands sold vary considerably in quality. The prices vary as much as the quality; one will even find the same brand selling at very different prices in the stores of a single district.

We found out these points by extensive investigations. We spent six months simply in investigation before we decided upon any policy. We had 36 women out in New York, Connecticut and New Jersey and they called upon over a hundred thousand housewives and retail grocers to get information on what people expect to find in a baking powder, what influence controlled their purchases—that is whether, among other things, any kind of a premium or odd selling device was as influential as quality of product; whether they were better satisfied to buy a thing always at the same price with that price stamped on the label or whether they preferred to take their chances with bargains. We investigated the grocers' views on these same points, what they thought of price-cutting, where they made their money. In the course of all this we also tried to find out what sort of reading matter would most appeal to the class we wanted to reach.

Policy Formed from Answers

Out of the answers we formulated our policy, the essence of which is to stamp the retail sales price upon the package, to standardize the price to the jobber and his price to the retailer. The absolute right of the manufacturer so to standardize prices is, we believe, established, but that is a point which is scarcely proper to discuss in this article.

Then we advertised the baking powder. There are two ways of advertising—one is to advertise the thing itself and the other to advertise what it will do, and, although we did advertise the thing itself, we gave our attention more particularly to advertising the service. This is, I think, the more logical procedure, because advertising the product may lead to admiration which would possibly develop a desire for acquisition, but advertising the use, if successful at all, can only lead to the desire to buy.

Big Reason Was Fixed Price

We distributed more than 2,000,000 expensive cook books, filled with recipes, each one of which required baking powder. We extensively went into the subject of the amount of baking powder required, which was a very interesting investigation, because naturally the amount required depends upon the uniformity of the product, and it was a selling point to standardize these amounts with our own product.

But that which we found of greatest value and the one most appreciated by the consumer, by the retailer and by the jobber was the settlement upon a fixed, fair distributive price.

And it seems to me that it is along this line of co-operation that the best results in distribution are eventually to be obtained. For essentially this is only a venture in co-operation—the forming of a co-operative chain from the manufacturer to the consumer with the manufacturer standing behind the price as well as behind the quality of his product.

The speculative plan of marketing goods is a matter of tradition and it has hung on in spite of the fact that the

He, too, must go to the banker, and in his case his banker is usually the grocer or the loan shark, or pawnbroker. The average credit loss in a retail grocery business is estimated to be only three-tenths of one per cent. of the volume of business done. To save this three-tenths of one per cent. on the price of the article, as purchased, the poor man is compelled to pay a pawnbroker or a loan shark anywhere from six per cent. up to 60 per cent. unless he can depend upon credit from his grocer.

Bitter For The Retailer

THE sales tax as imposed under the Budget appears to be very satisfactory to all concerned. Wholesalers were at first desirous to have the tax on sales placed at the source of manufacture or importation, thus having the tax collected at one point instead of at two points. However, wholesale grocers have expressed themselves as satisfied with the changes.

As far as the collection of the tax is concerned, the law stands in the same position as before, with an additional 50 per cent. added to the old rate. The manufacturer collects from the wholesaler and the wholesaler collects from the retailer, who simply adds it to the cost of the merchandise.

This is a fair way to dispose of this tax, as viewed from the retailers' angle, as it insures the tax being placed on all merchandise that is taxable and eliminates the confusion and costly collection from hundreds of thousands of retail merchants who—were it passed to the retailer to collect—would be required to make returns instead of the few thousands of manufacturers and wholesalers who are now levying the sales tax.

Inventory Twice Yearly

A GROCER in the West saved himself disaster by taking an inventory twice last year, and merchants generally would no doubt profit by so doing. It proved a good practice in this instance and there is no reason that others should not be benefited by a stock-taking every six months. This merchant in taking stock at the beginning of July last year, as is pointed out in an article in this issue, found that in spite of the fact that his business ran along about $10,000 a month, he had suffered a loss of $2,400 for the six months.

This actual loss of $2,400 awakened him to the fact that he had too much stock. He started to reduce it. He went over it in the most minute detail, seeking items whereon the margin was too narrow, and priced many things higher than they had been before. He realized that he could mark time awaiting a better season, but that he could not afford to go backward. He bought no futures, with the result that as the market declined, he bought and sold in short lines, very rapidly, and made money all the way down to the readjusted basis of to-day. He ended the year with a gain of $3,300 for the second period of six months, showing earnings of only $900 for the year. It is little enough, but how vastly better than the story of many a man who went behind, particularly in the latter period of 1920.

This was the result of the semi-annual inventory, plus watchfulness. Many a grocer might inaugurate the custom of an inventory twice a year, to the advantage of his business.

Courtesy Always Pays

COURTESY to customers always pays returns in the way of increased business, and discourtesy has in some instances, that have come to the attention of Canadian Grocer not only meant the loss of one customer but of additional ones, friends of the woman who had been the recipient of the unfair treatment.

The other day a member of the Canadian Grocer staff was told of a grocer who had not failed in conducting himself as a gentleman, but by his lack of tact and sufficient diplomacy, lost for himself, the trade of at least three customers, who were in the habit of leaving fair sized orders with him from week to week. A woman went to this man's store to purchase a certain article, but, not having the money at the time, did not pay for it. Some days later, on making other purchases she was reminded by the grocer that she owed for her previous purchase. She proffered forgetfulness as the reason for her neglect, at which the merchant replied. "Oh, you have some forgetter."

The woman, who was a regular customer at the store, resented the remark, and straightway informed the merchant that she would not buy anything more in his store. It is also more than likely that she has told several other women in the neighborhood of the incident, and aroused their indignation against this tactless grocer.

In all circumstances, it pays to act as courteously as possible. It will create a reputation for you that will redound to your benefit, and will bring customers to your store more times than you yourself can estimate.

Editorials in Brief

NO MAN is so big that he can afford to get the ill-will of his subordinates. The giant of the forest must depend upon its roots for its strength.

HAPPY salesmen make happy customers; happy customers make liberal patrons; liberal patrons make bigger business; bigger business means a lower cost; a lower cost means increased profits; increased profits means satisfaction; satisfaction means success.

NOW IS the time when the retailer can do the decent thing by the manufacturer who stood by him when prices were soaring, the men who played fair with him in the allotment of goods when they were scarce, the firm that did not increase its prices unduly. When manufacturers of this kind are asking only for reasonable orders and when these orders, in the aggregate, mean so much to them, past favors should certainly be remembered.

Revelations of a Mid-Year Inventory

How One Grocer Profited by Stocktaking at the End of July as Well as at the End of the Year—Saved Himself Disaster by Careful Watching

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

THOMPSON & SON are grocers in a Western town, the store being run by the junior Thompson, who is an alert young man, active and awake to anything that may affect his business. The firm had made money right along during the years not only of war but when prices rocketed after the war. But Thompson was watchful of events and when he read warnings that values were certain to react he began to pull in his lines and curtail stocks somewhat.

He has one valuable habit. He inventories twice yearly. The first half of 1920 ran along at about $10,000 a month. Despite the fact that meats advanced in wholesale cost in greater ratio than it was possible to advance the retail prices, he thought they were realizing a little money. But the inventory, with its revealing enlightenment, showed him a loss of $2,400 for the six months!

You see, people were tightening up a bit in the early months of 1920. Mines were even then running short handed, and money was scarce. A big chunk—some 40 per cent.—of Thompson's business is in fresh meats, and cost thereon advanced to unprecedented heights that year. What with tight money, customers' earnings down near to nothing and competition bidding for trade through the familiar pressure of low prices, Thompson felt that he must choose between losing volume or curtailing earnings; and he chose to keep up the volume, hoping for better times and lower costs later on.

The Awakening Bump

But the actual, tangible loss of $2,400 awakened him with great suddenness and he knew something must be done. He found $8,500 of stock on hand. That, figuring sales of $125,000 at an average spread of 25 per cent., which is nearly actual in this town, showed average turnover of something over eleven times. But the meat makes up 40 per cent. of the sales and meat is turned about every two days, so practically no meat stock showed up in the inventory and, if the $8,500 stock be figured against 60 per cent. of the sales, the turnover of the grocery stock is seen to be only 7.61 times plus.

"Too much stock!" said Thompson, getting the idea he had read of all of a sudden with great force, and he started to reduce it. But he did something else. He went over it in the most minute detail, seeking items whereon the margin was too narrow, and priced many things higher than they had been before. For he felt that he could mark time awaiting a better season, but he could not afford to go backward.

As he stopped buying anything except fill-ins, he cut stocks down rapidly. He bought no futures whatever. Result was that, as the market declined, he bought and sold, in short lines, very rapidly, and made money all the way down to the readjusted basis of to-day. So he ended the year with $4,400 stock, thus showing around thirteen turns on his sales of $56,250 of groceries a year.

Meantime, wholesale prices of meats declined. The tide turned and he was able, by holding back on his retail prices, to recoup his former losses and maintain his volume of trade. So he ended the year with a gain of $3,300 for the second period of six months. That shows earnings of only $900 for the year—less than ¾ per cent. on sales for the year. It is little enough, we shall all agree, but how vastly better is it than the record of many a man who ran away behind in 1920? And this result was achieved because of the semi-annual inventory habit, plus watchfulness!

No Self-Deception Here

Moreover, Thompson does not guess—he knows. I asked him how he knew he had come out with some earnings, and he said he took all depreciation rigidly. I said: "Don't believe in fooling yourself much, eh?" His answer was interesting.

"No," he said. "We take account of every shrinkage we can find and put in a little more for good, conservative measure. We realize that nobody but ourselves will pay the penalty of any fooling that we do with our figures—so we play safe! That $900 net is net. It is there. It is little, and far from satisfactory, but it is ours and we know it has been earned."

What a wonderful change would be wrought in the grocery business if a few other merchants could bring themselves to watch their affairs as closely as Thompson does, and make sure of their facts twice a year! For if you will notice carefully, you will see that it was the July 1st inventory that saved Thompson from real loss.

Getting "All Het Up" About Little

One writes me his troubles thusly:

Have a proposition we can't solve ourselves. We had a cut rate grocery spring up about the time when the slump came and he took the credit by telling the people that he was the cause of the decline in prices. He hung a big banner in front of his store: "This is the Store that Brought Down the High Cost of Living." He accused us grocerymen of holding the public up, said he did not belong to a combine, etc. We were not in a combine and never were, but he has the people believing it.

He has not a dollar of his own, but there is someone behind him and we can't find out for sure who it is. About a year ago another bank started here and said it was going to see that there would be two of everything in town, as we business men divide our business between the two banks. It is someone with plenty of money who is backing him as he is buying very reckless. He is in a dwelling house on the main street owned by said bank who made a stall that they had sold him the building as he wanted more room and felt the necessity of building to it. No transfer has ever been made that anyone has seen. What we want to know is how to find out for sure who is behind him, and the best method of advertising to get some of the customers back whom we have lost. He has hurt all of us, but I don't think he will last long, but it makes it mean while he is here.

I have been thinking of private letters, as the newspaper ads make a target for him to shoot at.

Yours truly, ———

All such excitement tends to make me tired. It is so useless, so uncalled for, so unnecessary to any merchant who ever has rendered any real service to his community. Of course, if my correspondent has been one of those who have been taking all they could get while the taking was good and have been inclined to sneer, perhaps, at the complaining customer, then probably the shoe offered by the newcomer pinches because he has felt the need to put it on. It simmers down to this:

Is the accusation true? Then the only way to do is reform and take the time needful to live down the evil reputation. Is it not true? Then pursue your way in dignified silence, except to keep up your work of serving your customers as you have always done.

As for finding out who is behind this newcomer. First, maybe he is behind himself. I find everywhere grocers who say a successful neighbor is owned by a given jobbing house, and investigation shows that not only he owns his store, but his competition hurts because it is good, strong competition. In such cases the slander-monger merely hurts himself, because of the time and atten-

Another Use for Starch

Editor Canadian Grocer:

We are making a good thing from a small thing. We accidentally discovered that one of our customers was using ordinary laundry starch for wall paper paste. We tried it in our own home and we found it does the work better than the flour paste and at no more cost. Also there is no danger of the paste becoming lumpy. Another thing the starch paste will not mark the paper. In preparing the starch for paste it is done in the same manner as for the laundry.

Would be Better for the Grocer

Bread Manufacturer Thinks it is Better to Wait for a Return of More Stabilized Conditions, To Urge the Wrapping of all Bread by Bakers—What Health Officers Say

"CERTAINLY if we had to wrap bread it would be better for the grocer," Mark Bredin, of the Canada Bread Co., told a representative of Canadian Grocer this week. "If we wrap it, we will charge a cent per loaf extra for it, and the merchant will have his profit, without any cost of paper and string. The day is coming when we will have to wrap all the bread we put out, but the present I do not think is an opportune time to start. Let us wait until we get back to normal. Too many men are out of work just now to increase the price of bread a cent a loaf, and if it is wrapped the consumer will have to pay for it."

Grocer Pays for Wrapping

"But the grocer has to pay for the wrapping now, and loses that much out of his profit, doesn't he?" the Grocer representative asked.

"Some grocers figure in the cost of paper and twine in selling their bread, but of course there are a great many who lose that out of the profit allowed," Mr. Bredin replied. "We installed machines for wrapping bread, but only sell about one per cent. of our output wrapped. The consumer will not pay the extra to have it delivered to them in the wax paper, and, of course, at the present time, I would oppose any effort to compel the wrapping of bread, for the reason that too many people cannot afford to pay more for it than they are now paying."

"What percentage of bread is sold through the grocery trade in the city of Toronto?" Mr. Bredin was asked.

"Between 30 and 40 per cent. of the bread sold in Toronto is sold through grocers," he replied. Mr. Bredin was of the opinion that bread was not delivered in such an unsanitary condition that some people thought. More care was being taken than ever before to insure bread reaching the consumer in perfect condition. "However," he added, "it would be better for the grocer if bread was wrapped."

Time Is Not Opportune

W. C. Miller, secretary of the Ontario Retail Merchants' Association, expressed himself thoroughly in accord with the idea of having all bread wrapped by the bakers, and thus making it unnecessary for the grocer to wrap it, but he did not believe the present was an opportune time to reopen a question that had been vigorously threshed out a few years ago. There was an effort put forth to have bread wrapped early in the war period, but on account of conditions the matter was dropped. Similar conditions prevail today. There would be some objection to any increase in the price of bread and manufacturers declare that they could not wrap the bread without adding a cent to the present price. Therefore he thinks any agitation to make bread wrapping compulsory just now would be ill-timed.

Public Do Not Approve

Dr. Hastings, medical health officer of the city of Toronto, declared that the public did not want their bread wrapped, and until such time as they showed some desire for a law of this kind he was not disposed to do anything further in the matter. He told a representative of Canadian Grocer of the efforts that had been made a few years ago to bring into effect a by-law in the city of Toronto compelling bakers to wrap their bread, but it had not met with anything like the approval that it merited. One manufacturer went to the trouble of installing machinery for wrapping bread, but only a very few people buy their bread this way.

"It is hard to prove to people," he stated, "that dangers to health lurk in the way bread is at present delivered. There is no doubt about it that dust contaminates it, and it is not protected in the same way as when the bread is carefully wrapped. However, the people do not seem anxious to have bread wrapped, so there is nothing more to be said."

James Roberts, medical health officer of Hamilton, Ont., believes that the wrapping of bread would be very desirable, as from the sanitary standpoint many benefits would accrue to the public.

HIS NAME IS SAMUEL MILLER

In the two-page advertisement of Marland, Woolnough Co., of Niagara Falls, Ont., in the annual spring and summer number last week, an error appeared in the list of representatives of the firm. The name "Charles Miller" should have been "Samuel Miller." The trade in the Niagara peninsula on whom Mr. Miller calls no doubt recognized the error and will continue to name him "Sam" as in the past.

WHOLESALE GROCERS' CONVENTION WILL BE HELD NEXT MONTH

The Menace of the Pedlar

First of a series by A.B.C.

"PEDLARS out through the country are to-day doing 50 per cent. more business than they did in 1914," was the statement made recently by a man prominently connected with one of Canada's large food stuff institutions.

What is the cause of it, and having found the cause what is the remedy?

It may be that pedlars' licenses are not sufficiently high. They sell in districts where they pay little or no tax or license and take the business from retail merchants who have to maintain their overhead expenses in addition to paying their taxes and helping to build up their community.

But apart from this there must be some other remedy.

One merchant has pretty nearly hit the nail on the head when he stated his view of the cause:

"Pedlars are taking away the trade of the legitimate merchant by selling to consumers from house to house goods similar to those merchants are selling, but at a lower price.

"The pedlar can do this because he has little overhead to take care of—little or no equipment, light, heat, clerk's wages, etc., etc."

If the cause lies in the fact that the pedlar is selling similar goods at a lower price, then isn't it up to the merchant to sell goods that the pedlar cannot duplicate?

Think this over. A series of articles will appear in Canadian Grocer discussing this important question. In the next article further facts will be given on the "Menace of the Pedlar."

Hon. Edward Brown, Provincial Treasurer, intimated that this was but a temporary measure, applicable to this year only.

Will Market 70 Per Cent. of B.C. Fruits This Year

Nelson, B.C., May 2.—Delegates attending the tenth annual meeting of the Kootenay Fruit Growers' Union held here a few days ago were enthusiastic over the prospects of this year's crops. Dr. N. Wolverton presided. Directors and officers were appointed and it was decided to erect a new warehouse for the assembling and sorting of fruits.

Directors Re-elected

The retiring directors were all re-elected with the exception of J. T. Bealby, who replaces James Johnstone. The new directorate consists of Dr. N. Wolverton, J. A. McDonald, C. W. Busk, J. T. Bealby, O. B. Appleton, J. C. Harris and A. D. Emory. After the general meeting, the directors met and appointed C. W. Busk president and E. Norman manager. C. E. Barnes, of Vernon, manager of the Okanagan United Growers, submitted a proposal that the union co-operate with the organization he represented, the selling agency of the Okanagan United Growers. The proposal was unanimously accepted. Those present were Mayor C. F. McHardy, J. A. McDonald, H. H. Hoyle, J. T. Bealby, E. Norman, Dr. N. Wolverton, Commander Halleck and E. Gansner.

Realized Good Prices

Manager E. Norman, in his report on last year's activities, stated that the small crop of the district had been low in bulk, but had realized good prices. The apple crop was the largest experienced in years. The returns had not been so satisfactory, however, owing to a disrupted market.

The shipment totalled 9,026 packages, which realized $16,000 at an average commission of 8.66 per cent. Number 3 grade apples had totalled 49.6 per cent. of the entire shipments. The total commission amounted to $1,383. Mr. Norman's report also stated that the prospects of a very large crop, probably in the neighborhood of 350 carloads for the district, exclusive of Grand Forks, made it necessary for the union to have a warehouse for assembling.

Co-operation in Marketing

In outlining his co-operative proposals C. E. Barnes stated that the Okanagan United Growers' organization was trying to extend its selling plans all through the province along the line that had made the famous California fruit selling organizations so successful. The aim was to make it a British Columbia fruit selling association. This year it would handle 70 per cent. of the fruit crop of the province, possibly more, which in view of the fact that it was estimated the entire fruit crop would be 40 per cent. in excess of that of 1919, made the effort towards co-operation doubly important. British Columbia's fruit crop, he stated, was fast outgrowing its markets within both the province and the prairie markets, and the factor in extending the markets must be taken care of to prevent overlapping, and added competition in selling, with its consequent fall in prices.

"Goodwill and Co-operation" is Slogan

Retail Merchants of Saskatchewan at Eighth Annual Convention Next Month Will Discuss Many Matters of Vital Importance to the Retail Trade—Trade Section Meetings Will Be Held

THE eighth annual convention of the Saskatchewan board, the Retail Merchants' Association, which is to be held in Saskatoon on the three days of June 7, 8 and 9, promises to be notable on account of the special effort which will be made to bring the various branches of the producing and distributing sections of industry closer together. The keynote of the convention may be expressed in the slogan, "Good-will and Co-operation between the Manufacturing and Distributing Branches of Trade."

A Sightseeing Drive

After the preliminary session in the morning of Tuesday, June 7, at which the opening function and the officers' reports will be disposed of, the first item on the programme is a sightseeing automobile drive, including visits to the numerous points of interest around the beautiful city of Saskatoon. All the visiting delegates will be guests of the United Commercial Travellers' Association.

The object of this drive, together with the joint banquet which is scheduled for the evening, is to bring about a better understanding between the merchant and the commercial representatives of the distributing houses, and overcome that little feeling which has not been absent in the past on the part of the retailer that the traveller's visit was somewhat of an encroachment on his time, and, on the commercial man's part that the retailer failed to appreciate the value of his time, causing a good deal of unnecessary expense and delay in his schedule.

Trade Section Meetings

The second day of the convention is to be given over altogether to trade section meetings, to which the representatives of the supply houses operating in Saskatchewan are cordially invited, with a view to taking part in the discussions and giving the retailers the benefit of their point of view. The subjects up for discussion will be opened by well-known and representative men who are specialists in their line, and they are all subjects to which the wholesalers' and manufacturers' representatives can make a valuable contribution. A new feature in the conduct of Saskatchewan R.M.A. conventions is the demonstration and display of goods in which those manufacturers and jobbing houses which are co-operating with the association in the way of taking advertising space in the programme have been invited to take part. The convention hall is large and roomy, and the display booths will be ranged around a portion of the hall open for inspection during the whole period while the actual convention is not in session.

Some Timely Topics

Matters which are exercising the minds of all Saskatchewan merchants at the present time, such as the Income Tax, the respective merits of a cash and credit business, and mutual fire insurance, are all on the programme.

The Income Tax will be explained by Bert R. Masecar, B.Acc., who is the official auditor to the Saskatchewan Board, and is thoroughly acquainted with its requirements. The debate on cash and credit will be led by two representative country merchants, who are keen protagonists of the side each proposes to champion. Mutual fire insurance will be advocated by F. J. Martin, president of the Northwestern Mutual Fire Association of Seattle, the organization which is working with the nine provincial boards of the association with a view to giving the retail merchants of Canada cheaper fire protection.

Rural Service Departments

Most of the large business institutions operating in Western Canada have found that, in order to improve their relations with the farming community, it has been necessary to organize practical rural service departments to assist in improving farming conditions. Of all commercial endeavor, that of retail merchandising carries with it the most intimate relations with agriculture. It is, therefore, important that the retailer should offer his contributions to this basic industry. With this in mind, W. J. Rutherford, dean of the College of Agriculture, University of Saskatchewan, has been asked to bring the question of agricultural service before the convention on Thursday morning, when he will speak on "A New Line of Endeavor for the Retail Merchant."

Other noted speakers will be Professor W. W. Swanson, who will deal with the economics of retailing and other kindred subjects, and Hon. C. A. Dunning, Provincial Treasurer, whose subject will be "The Natural Resources of Saskatchewan."

The Department of Trade and Commerce has also been drawn upon for some interesting films showing the national industries of Canada. These will be shown on the second and third evenings of the convention, completing a series of meetings which promise to be most profitable to the visiting delegates.

THE REAL WASTE IN DISTRIBUTION

caveat emptor principle upon which it is and must be founded has been wholly condemned in recent years. Co-operative merchandising is the real conservation of time and energy as opposed to the false conservation, for it is more economical for the consumer to be able to buy without the trouble and risk of close examination. The housewife faring forth with her market basket and buying here and there at odd places and at very low prices is indeed a delightful picture, but I never heard anyone express enthusiasm about the weight of the basket on the way home, or discuss what some particularly canny merchant fooled her on, or what she did with the children while she was away.

Goods of Quality

The trade-marking, that is the guaranteeing of quality, is inherently opposed to the speculative principle, but there are a certain number of commodities which cannot well be marketed under trade marks. The ideal retailing policy, to my mind, is one in which the retailer would select only goods of established reputation and price and then plan his business facilities and service to attain an increasingly rapid rate of turnover. This is perhaps the counsel of perfection, but an approximation may be attained through planning that a certain proportion of the business shall be so handled.

Progress of Distribution

My programme as a merchant distributor, dividing the business into thirds, would be something after this fashion:

1—Trade-marked goods in direct co-operation with the manufacturer at a fixed price.

2—The sale of unmarked goods on a strictly competitive basis, figuring the profit here approximately so as to make a small profit—frankly buying and selling this character of merchandise as a trader and speculator.

3—Individual specialties brought out and fostered by the retailer himself, which should be sold purely on quality and not on competition.

I think that under this arrangement, which narrowly confines speculation, not only a better average profit might be had, but that a lower average price might be given to the consumer. All would gain.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

FURTHER declines are noted in the market for raw sugars with a small buying movement. A large quantity of unsold sugar is arriving in the Port of New York and is being placed in warehouses or on lighters awaiting a better demand and market conditions. The Sugar Finance Committee during part of the week quoted Cuban sugars at 3 3/8 cents c. & f. but later in the week withdrew from the market and are not at present making any quotation.

American refined sugar made a further decline during the week, bringing the price down to $6.30. Canadian prices remain steady with very little first-hand business transpiring. It is expected, however, that the improvement in weather conditions will improve the demand.

Cereals in bulk show an easier tendency and some brands of package cereals are reduced. Rices are easy with lower prices quoted on some varieties. Tapioca has firmer tendencies.

Primary tea markets continue to show strength with prices on the finer grades advanced. There appears to be large supplies of low grade coarse tea both in primary markets and on spot at low figures, but these have not the quality preferred by consumers, but on the other hand the better grades, which are in the bigger demand, are scarcer and higher.

Prunes, apricots, evaporated apples and figs are showing a stronger tone with quotations somewhat higher. The report of the serious damage by frosts during April to the raisin, prune and apricot crops is mainly responsible for the firmer tendency of this market and it is now believed that the stocks will be practically cleaned up by the time the new crop arrives. It will be remembered that there was a heavy carryover of these fruits the last season, which, together with the poor demand in Europe, caused prices to drop practically to pre-war levels.

Canned vegetables are fairly steady under an active demand but fruits continue to be inactive and prices are irregular. Quotations on new pack lobsters are out and show a considerable receding from last year's opening prices. Flour is in a stronger position with prices advanced.

The nut market continues strong with higher prices quoted on walnuts, almonds and pecans. Brazils, however, are easier with a tendency for lower prices. Cocoanut is also showing firmer tendencies.

The produce markets generally have easier tendencies. Butter is again reduced with further reductions in sight. Cheese, being influenced greatly by the butter market, is also easier with lower prices named. Live hogs, bacon, lard and shortening are all slightly lower.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 11.—The grocery market in general is steady this week with a number of minor declines and some advances, particularly on fresh fruit and new vegetables. The demand for cucumbers and cabbage has caused a stringency in supplies and prices have advanced. Grapefruit are more scarce and higher prices are asked. Strawberries are also advanced. There are good supplies of oranges and pineapples. Both the fruit and the vegetable markets are active with a good call for supplies. Lower prices are quoted on rolled oats, oatmeals, cornflakes, split peas and lima beans. Figs and raisins are scarce and higher prices are asked on the primary markets. Walnuts are very scarce and higher prices are quoted on these and on almonds. The new supply of shelled walnuts has just arrived and the price quoted shows an advance of 5 cents a pound. The sugar market is quiet and as the raw market is weak buyers are purchasing only for immediate requirements. The early reports of the budget have had the effect of stabilizing to some degree the sugar market in view of the anti-dumping clause. Wrapping paper is further reduced and more brands of soap are lower. Castor oil and cod liver oil are reduced. The tea and coffee markets are unchanged.

Lower Price on Rolled Oats

Montreal.

CEREALS—Lower prices are quoted by the wholesalers on rolled oats and on oatmeals. Rolled oats, 90's, are now selling at $3.15 and oatmeal at $3.60. The market for cereals is not active and dealers are only buying for immediate requirements. Split peas are reduced 35 cents a bag to $5.00 and lima beans are reduced 2 cents per pound, now selling at 10 cents.

Interest in Canned Goods

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS—There is no change in the quotations on canned fruits and vegetables. Prices are steady with a fair movement of stocks. Much interest is attached to the new budget in so far as it affects canned goods, and some manufacturers are at a loss to know just how it will affect the prices on some lines of canned goods. As yet the point is not clear.

Coffee Market Steady

Montreal.

COFFEE—There is no change in the coffee market. Prices are steady with a good movement of stocks.

Grapefruit Higher

Montreal.

FRUIT—Practically the only apples left on the market are packed in boxes of from 175 to 216. These are quoted at $4.25 per box. The grapefruit season is drawing to a close with smaller supplies on the market. Porto Rico grapefruit have advanced 25 cents this week and are now quoted at $5.00 per case. There are only small supplies of Florida grapefruit on the market and these are quoted at $6.00 per case. There has been a very good supply of strawberries, but the demand has been large and prices have advanced this week to 35 cents per pint box. A good supply of pineapples is offered and prices are unchanged. Oranges are in good supply with a fair demand and prices are steady.

Primary Tea Market Strong

Montreal.

TEAS—The local tea market is quiet and still shows weak conditions, although reports from primary markets show higher prices and a stronger outlook. The weak condition here is entirely due to an overloaded market with few buyers. Wholesalers and retailers are only buying for immediate requirements and the trade is slow. It is quite evident, however, that when buying is forced the prices quoted will be higher.

Molasses Prices Firmer

Montreal.

MOLASSES—Local wholesalers have advanced the price on bulk molasses 2½ cents per gallon, now quoted 77½ cents. This price has been general for some time, but a slight reduction was made a week ago, making the price 75 cents in the city. The wholesalers who made this cut have been forced to bring the price back to the former level. This adjustment in price, though not general, indicates a firmer tendency to the market. There is no change in the quotations on corn syrups.

Canadian Chicory Lower

Montreal.

SPICES—The movement of supplies is slow, but prices are steady. Wholesalers and for the most part the retailers have their supplies bought for the summer, and for this reason the market is quiet. Dealers in this city state that the country business is more active than that in the city. Canadian chicory has dropped four cents per pound, now quoted 14 cents.

Walnuts and Almonds Higher

Montreal.

NUTS—The nut market is stronger with an advance of four cents quoted on shelled almonds. This advance is on the importers' market, and has not yet affected the wholesale market. Walnuts are getting very scarce and reports show that supplies are exhausted in France. The import cost of Bordeaux halves is now 64 cents. This will result in advance in the wholesale price. The demand for nuts is steady and with the advancing market the demand continues quite as large, since those requiring supplies have not been carrying stocks larger than for immediate requirements. Shelled walnuts of the new crop have just arrived on the market, being very late in delivery. The opening price, 65 cents per lb. in boxes, shows an advance of 5 cents per pound. The peanut market is steady with a good demand.

Figs and Raisins Scarce

Montreal.

DRIED FRUIT—There is a much firmer tone to the whole dried fruit market. Figs are very scarce and New York is enquiring in this market for supplies, since there is practically nothing to be had on the primary markets. Although the wholesale prices are unchanged, higher prices may be looked for just as soon as the dealers have to buy from the importers again. There is an advance of 20 shillings quoted in London. Smyrna raisins are scarce and supplies of the best fruit are unobtainable and lower grades can only be purchased from second hands. Fifteen thousand tons of Sultana raisins have been sold this season and only 450 tons are yet to be disposed of, which means that the supply is short of the demand. There is a better demand for dried apples, which is expected to improve until the new apples are on the market. Prices are firm and the holding company has announced an advance of half cent, which makes the price to the wholesaler 11½ cents. This would indicate an advance in the present price quoted to the retailer.

Rangoon Rice Lower

Montreal.

RICE—Rangoon rice is listed on the market this week with lower quotations than are made on any other brand of rice. The C.G. unglazed is selling at $3.90 per 100, and V. glazed is selling at $4.15 per 100. This rice undersells the other varieties and will have a tendency to further weaken the rice market. Texas rice is reduced ¼ cent per pound, and is quoted at 4½ cents. The rice market in general shows further weakness, but dealers state that they are well stocked.

Cucumbers are Higher

Montreal.

VEGETABLES—There is a good supply of fresh vegetables on the market with a good demand for all lines. Cucumbers have become scarce on account of the big demand for the early supply and an advance of $1.00 per hamper is recorded, making the price $7.50. New cabbage is also advanced in price, and is now quoted at $4.00. Good supplies of new tomatoes are on the market and prices are steady. It is expected that within a short time Canadian grown vegetables will be on the market with resulting lower prices.

Decline on Wrapping Paper

Montreal.

MISCELLANEOUS—Cod liver oil is reduced 50 cents a gallon and is now quoted at $1.50 per gallon in barrel lots and $2 in less quantities. Pharmaceutical castor oil is down one dollar a gallon to $1.80 in barrel lots and $2 in less quantities. Carpet and shoe tacks are reduced. The four-ounce blue carpet tacks are 10 cents lower at 42 cents and the tinned are reduced from 62 cents to 47 cents. Other sizes are reduced in proportion.

Other brands of soap are reduced. Lever Brothers' fancy toilet soaps and castile soap are lower in price. Fels-Naptha soap is reduced $1.10 per case to $8.00. Further reductions are made in wrapping paper. The grey-brown is down again one cent, to 7 cents per pound. Manilla is down to 8 cents, and kraft is reduced 2¼ cents to 11 cents per pound.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 11.—Under the influence of the strong and higher wheat market flour has developed a stronger tone and prices have advanced during the week. Millfeeds, however, are unchanged. Wheat flakes and one brand of pancake flour in packages have declined. Quotations on the new pack lobsters are out and show a slightly higher figure than present prices but considerably lower than last year's opening quotations. The tariff of $1 per hundred pounds placed on grapefruit, other than West Indian, will advance prices and become effective immediately as majority of wholesalers have low stocks. Generally speaking, vegetables tend easier under an active demand and heavy shipments. There is little change in canned vegetables and fruits, but there is some irregularity in quotations. Teas and coffees continue in a firm position. Shelled walnuts are higher under a strong demand. Almonds are also strong but quotations on spot are unchanged. Brazils are easier and lower. The sugar market has an uncertain tone due to the weak condition of raws and the small demand from first hands.

Some Baked Beans Lower

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—Canned vegetables continue to show a good movement at fairly steady prices, but fruits are dull and prices are somewhat irregular. Clark's pork and beans, No. 3 tins, are reduced to $2.45 per dozen. Canadian boiled dinner is reduced to $2.45 per dozen. Quotations for the new pack lobsters are out. Quarters are offered at $2.40 per dozen and halves at $3.80 to $4.00. These prices are a little higher than present quotations on last year's pack, but considerably lower than last year's opening prices.

Apricots Advance

oronto.

DRIED FRUITS—Prunes at the coast ave considerably stiffened under the in- ence of an active demand for export Europe. Apricots have also advanced primary markets and one car of apri- ts that were held in bond in Toronto ve been resold at the higher rate to ew York buyers. The report that the osts of a few weeks ago have consid- ably damaged the crop of both apricots d prunes has also had the effect of lstering up the market and it is con- dered that stocks will be cleaned up the time the new crop arrives.

Lemon Market Firmer

Toronto.

FRUITS.—Pineapples are now arriving in heavy shipments and it is now considered the proper time for preserving. Prices are lower and range from $4.00 to $6.25 per case, according to size. Lemons are firmer, with Californias advanced 25 cents per case, but Messinas are unchanged. With the advancing warm weather there are indications that lemon prices will be higher. Ontario apples are practically over, but Washington boxed apples are in demand at $3.25 to $3.75 per box. The tariff of $1.00 per hundred pounds placed on grapefruit means an increase of 75 to 80 cents per case and according to most fruit importers will have a tendency to curtail sales.

Prune Market Firmer

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUIT.—There is a better feeling in the prune market and larger sizes have stiffened up. The peach market is easy and the demand is improving at lower levels. Apricots are firmer and higher, due largely to frost destroying a large percentage of the new crop which has caused holders of spot stocks to advance their prices. The raisin market is easier with quotations varying. There is however a good demand for this line and spot stocks are light. Evaporated apples are firmer and advanced one cent per pound recently.

Need for Strong Association

But assuming that your interest legitimate and that maybe somebody putting up a rival with certain unf advantages, here is the need for a m chants' association. Like other plac your town probably has none, becau you have been prosperous and, the fore, why prepare for trouble whi may never come? So the trouble fin you all unprepared. I suggest therefo that you and your neighbors meet a form an association. Don't compl about the new man, but find out wheth he is buying from anybody on an insi basis of price.

If you find that anybody is playi unfairly, you can club together and b certain lines, divide them up among y and thus all of you be in position offer any number of items, as lead and specials, at attractive prices. Th stick to your business; stick togeth have confidence in each other; and yo salvation will be safeguarded.

The probability is that the new m will last only a short time—unless he in fact a keen, skilful rival. In th case, you will either have to develop t same quality of ability or you will thrown into the discard in the face deserving rivalry. You can be sure one thing and that is that nobody, matter who he is, will "back" any losi venture very long. If then this m folds his tent some night and ste quietly away, you will wonder why y got so terribly excited.

These times of readjustment are t ing to any easy-going merchant w maybe had no experience before the w and found business really quite an teresting and profitable pastime in t time of inflated values. But the day the new deal is here. It is the ti that will try men and show exactly wh they are made of. Those who have r dered a real service to the people w survive, even if meantime the peo may suspect them a little. The fa have a way of showing up after a ti and the man who knows his busine and is diligent in it, will not fail.

Get together. Find means to ins that nobody is getting any advanta of you. Then 'tend to your knitting gardless of the "backing" of anybody.

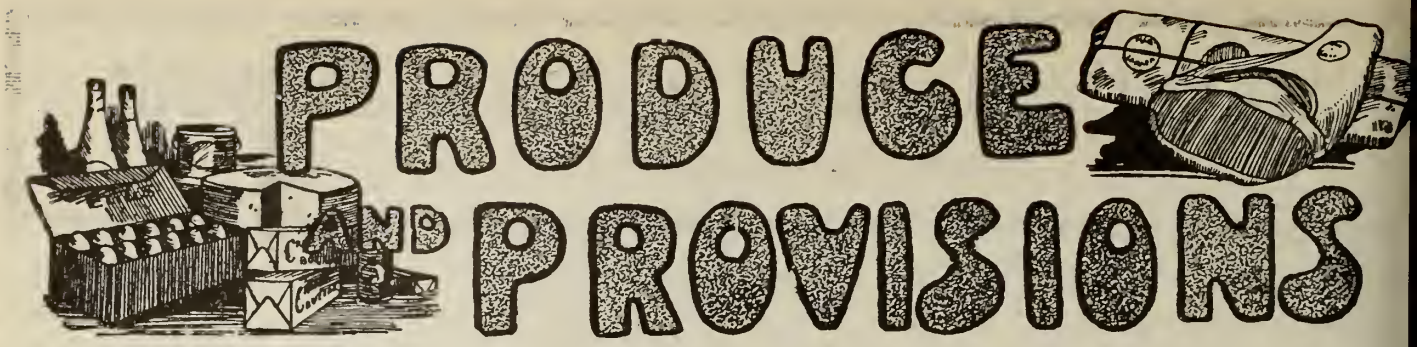
U.S. Merchants Talk of Delivery Through the Post

Washington.—Merchants in the large cities of the country are seriously considering giving up their delivery systems and handing over the entire delivery business to the post office. The belief that this is feasible and would result in economy and efficiency is growing in the larger cities, where a considerable part of the delivery of packages is being done through parcel post service.

That there is a general tendency in this direction was developed at the conference held here recently between Will H. Hays, postmaster-general, and a group of postmasters from the larger cities, who had come to Washington to discuss with Mr. Hays the general conditions of the service and to propose improvements.

The postmaster-general was told that large stores in many cities are seriously considering the possibilities of getting all their delivery business done through the parcel post. It was not possible to give the postmaster-general exact figures to show the cost of parcel post delivery as compared with the cost of delivery by truck, which is now the general practice of the larger stores. Figures secured from Minneapolis showed that the cost of delivery through the post-office is considerably less than the cost of maintaining private delivery facilities.



Potatoes and Onions Must be Graded

Act Now Before the Dominion Parliament Will Regulate the Sale and Inspection of Root Vegetables—Grocers' Section of R.M.A. Approve of The Same

TORONTO, May 9. — The grocers' section of the Retail Merchants' Association, at a largely attended meeting this evening approved of the act now before the Dominion Parliament, to regulate the sale and inspection of root vegetables, particularly potatoes and onions. The act will in all probability become law this week. The grading of these vegetables, as made essential by this act, will result in both retailers and consumers having a better knowledge of what they are buying.

The law known as the "Root Vegetables Act" is as follows:

The Marking of Potatoes

Every person who, by himself or through the agency of another person, offers for sale potatoes in a bag or barrel, shall cause the bag or barrel to be marked in a plain and indelible manner, on a suitable tag, before it is taken from the premises where it is packed:—

(a) With the initials of his Christian names and his full surname and address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation, with the firm or corporate name and address;

(b) With a designation of the grade of potatoes, which shall include one of the following three marks, viz., "Canada-A," "Canada-B" and Canada-C Ungraded."

The letters on the barrel must be not less than three-quarters of an inch in length, before it is taken from the premises where it is packed:—

(a) With the initials of his Christian names, and his full surname and address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation with the firm or corporate name and address;

(b) With a designation of the grade of potatoes which shall include one of the following three marks, viz., "Canada-A," "Canada-B" "Canada-C Ungraded;"

1c. Every person who, by himself or through the agency of another person, offers for sale potatoes, bulk in car lots, shall attach to the invoice or bill of lading covering each car lot, a declaration, in triplicate form, upon which shall be stated:—

(a) The initials of his Christian names, and his full surname and address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation, the firm or corporate name and address;

(b) A designation of the grade of potatoes which shall include one of the following three marks, viz., "Canada-A," "Canada-B" "Canada-C Ungraded."

(c) The initials and number of the car;

(d) The date of shipment of the car.

1c. The grade mark used may be accompanied by any other designation of grade or brand, if that designation or brand is not inconsistent with, or marked more conspicuously than, the one of the said three marks which is used on the said package or declaration.

1d. Every person who, by himself or through the agency of another person, again used, for the sale of potatoes any bag or barrel upon which appears any of the marks required by this section, shall cause such marks to be completely removed, erased or obliterated.

The Different Grades

2. No person shall sell or offer for sale any potatoes upon which are marked any designation of grade representing such potatoes to be of:—

Increases Sales From 25 Pounds to 100 Pounds of Peanut Butter Per Week

"SINCE making our own peanut butter, our sales have increased from 25 pounds per week to 100 pounds," stated G. H. Knowles, Newmarket, Ont., to a representative of Canadian Grocer recently: "We find customers buying peanut butter who had never used it before. But seeing it ground and the kind of nuts it is made from, they now buy it regularly. Then too the children seem to want more of it, they like to see the mill working, and when they come in with their parents, they easily persuade them to buy."

The mill is installed in such a location that it is readily seen by the customers upon entering the store. No doubt this fact had something to do with the increased sales. The mill is a combination coffee and peanut grinder, one side for peanut butter and the other for coffee. It can be switched to grinding one or the other without any readjustments or assembling of attachments.

To stimulate sales of peanut butter, Mr. Knowles has printed circulars containing a number of recipes and various methods of using peanut butter. These circulars are slipped under the string of a parcel when being delivered and are also handed to customers when they are in the store. These circulars in conjunction with the grinder have been the means of creating an interest in peanut butter that previously did not exist and sales are steadily increasing.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 11.—There are many features to the produce market this week. On account of the early, warm spring, and the advanced state of the pastures, the dairy market is very active with further improvements in the supplies and lower prices quoted on butter, cheese and eggs. The outstanding feature is the further decline on fresh made butter. The supply continues to improve and the demand is also improved. Eggs are lower, and with the bigger production there is an improved demand. Cheese, which has been fairly steady during the last three months, has declined on account of the arrival on the market of a good supply of new made cheese. The export market also shows weakness. The prospects are for a big make of cheese this year. Old cheese is steady in price although in some instances one cent has been deducted from the market quotation. The hog market is steady with a demand for light weight hogs, which covers practically all the offerings. The heavies, however, show a surplus with a consequent weakness.

Record Decline on Butter

Montreal.

BUTTER.—The butter market has reached the lowest point that has been quoted for this season in the last four years. The receipts of butter are large and are 3,861 packages in excess of the receipts of the corresponding week of last year. The wholesale price is ten cents lower than the quotation of one week ago and 24 cents below the price quoted two weeks ago. This remarkable decline is due to the big supplies of fresh made creamery butter offered on the market. Produce dealers look for a steadier market but do not feel that the price will jump very much unless there is an unusually good demand for export. The butter market at the present time is one that should be watched very closely. The production is very good, the demand is good but the decline is abnormal and a reaction might follow.

Cheese Prices Decline

Montreal.

CHEESE.—The cheese market shows weaker tendencies, partly in sympathy with the butter market, partly on account of the big increase in receipts and to a great extent on account of the falling off in the demand for export. European markets are watching closely the dairying industry in this country and with the big drop in butter, buyers are expecting lower prices on cheese and are therefore holding off. The cheese reports show a decline of from 1 to 5 cents a pound on new cheese. The old cheese, as far as the grocery market is immediately concerned, shows an easier price with a decline of from ¾ to 1½ cents a pound. The principal feature of the market is simply that cheese shows downward tendencies.

The price quoted by wholesalers is from 35 to 36 cents per dozen. There is every indication that the production will continue as good as it is at present.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 11.—Butter was again in the limelight during the week with another big reduction manifest. The butter market is in a weak condition and further reductions are expected. The cheese market is being influenced greatly by the butter market and prices are gradually sagging to lower levels. Lard is slightly easier and lower. Some brands of shortening in one pound cartons are down slightly, but, generally speaking, the market is unchanged. Eggs tend easier wih lower prices. Live and dressed hogs are further reduced in an easy market. Veal and spring lamb also reach lower levels. Live chickens are slightly easier under increased receipts.

Butter Continues Downward

Toronto.

BUTTER.—With the increasing supply of butter, prices are again reduced around ten cents per pound. Many dealers are looking for further reductions and one dealer who is in close touch with the situation stated that the wholesale price would reach 25 cents by the end of the month. Fresh made creamery prints are quoted at 40 cents for the best quality and 36 cents for second grades. These quotations, however, can be considered purely nominal. In summing up the situation, it was remarked in one quarter that there was "no price for butter, it was just what could be obtained."

EGGS.—The egg market continues with a downward trend and with the condition of the export market not showing much encouragement for storage and the fact that production is still on the increase, there is nothing to indicate that the market will show anything but a weak condition for some time to come. Quotations to the retail trade are reduced one cent per dozen.

FRESH MEATS.—Hog prices again declined. Packers were successful in cutting prices 50 cents per hundred and they state that if the demand for their products shows no increase a further reduction will be necessary. Dressed hogs are also lower, lightweight quoted $16 to $18 and heavy $13 to $15 per hundred. Fresh pork cuts are down one to two cents per pound. There is little change in dressed beef or cattle. Veal is easier at 16 to 20 cents per pound. Receipts of lambs showed an increase and prices are lower at $10 to $14 each.

Lard Drops Half Cent

Toronto.

LARD.—The slight advance registered on lard quotations last week did not hold and prices are reduced a half cent per pound. There appears to be a little uncertainty as to the future condition of the market. Some packers state that the market has reached the lowest point and a slight increase can be expected, due to the fact that lard is now selling at practically the same price as hogs and present prices do not allow anything for the manufacture. Others state, however, that although present prices do not represent manufacturing cost, there is no indication that there will be any immediate change.

Sends Cards to Automobile Owners

There is a grocer in a live Ontario town that goes after picnic trade in a unique way. In the town are a very large number of automobile owners, who, throughout the summer months spend their week-ends and holidays picnicking in the country. This merchant has a fairly comprehensive list of the owners of cars. To them he sends cards from time to time, with the suggestion of some special line that will no doubt be appreciated at a picnic meal. There are many, many such things. He has found the scheme has worked splendidly. The fact that the recipient feels you have taken the trouble to suggest things to her, invariably means a sale. Of course, such a plan is always accompanied by a good window and counter display.

The Pure Lard That Increases Trade—

EVERY dealer who handles Davies' Pure Lard is assured of having satisfied customers. This will bring a steady increase in business and a popularity to your store.

Davies' Pure Lard is absolutely pure—made under the supervision of Government inspectors. It contains nothing but pork fats, into which has been rendered the pure leaf of the hog.

This gives Davies' Pure Lard a quality which places it in very high esteem by everyone who uses it.

Order some to-day. Put up in tierces, tubs, pails, cases, 10's, 5's, 3's, also cartons.

TWO MEN

There are two men we know, you know them too—they are in every town and in every street of every city in Canada.

The first lives in Hamilton—George Travers is the name we will know him by.

A few months ago he wrote us to analyze some stock he held. By chance he learned through a friend, of THE FINANCIAL POST Investors' Inquiry Service. $3,000.00 he had paid for what were now mere scraps of paper. The whole lot of prettily engraved certificates wasn't worth over $150.00.

"If only I had known of your service seven years ago, when I spent my money for this stuff," said Mr. Travers, "I would have had a real stake now."

The Other Side

Out in Sunny California away from the biting winters of Canada—in a little bungalow which could well be called "ideal," lives another man—he is well beyond middle age, but he doesn't need to work again except at his own pleasure. He has made sufficient for his needs, and saved it by investing his yearly profits from a modest grocery store.

Fourteen years ago he realized that savings were not saved until they were safely invested in income-producing securities. From a knowledge gained by a weekly reading of FINANCIAL POST he began setting aside a monthly sum for investments. Invariably he asked the opinion of our Investors' Inquiry Service before investing. And after these years of working moderately hard he has comfort, independence and a life income—more than that he has an estate.

"You will be glad to know," he wrote, "I am able to sell out and retire from active business. The whole of my present estate I owe to sound investments made through your Investors' Inquiry Service."

WHICH?

At fifty which will you have? Great fortunes, as a rule, are the result of careful savings and wise investments.

Learn more of securities and investments through THE FINANCIAL POST, and make use of the valuable Investors' Inquiry Service, which is free to FINANCIAL POST readers. Through this service experts advise you the class of security that fits your needs and point out clearly the factors of safety and risk in each one.

It is only a moment of decision you need. Fill in the coupon and prove for yourself what THE FINANCIAL POST of Canada can do for you.

Sirs:

Send me THE FINANCIAL POST. I'll read it carefully and if I decide not to take it I'll write you within five days. Otherwise you'll know I want to keep on getting THE POST and will bill me for $5.00—price for one year—52 issues.

CALIFORNIA FRUIT DAMAGED BY FROST

Reports from the coast indicate that the succession of frosts during the month of April seriously damaged California's fruit crop. The Raisin Association estimates that the damage will lessen the raisin output 65,000 tons.

In the Santa Clara Valley some damage is reported to the prune crop as well as other varieties, although other districts in the State suffered worse than the Santa Clara Valley. The prune crop promised to be pretty heavy there in any event and it is thought it could stand a little thinning advantageously. On the other hand, apricots are going to be quite short as they were not plentiful before the frosts. Napa and Sonoma counties have reported considerable damage to the French prune crop.

The California Peach and Fig Growers' Association announces that reports coming in to it advise of considerable damage to peaches and figs, particularly in certain sections.

THE "WANT" AD.

The "want ad." has grown from a little used force in business life into one of the great necessities of the present day.

Business men nowadays turn to the "want ad." as a matter of course for a hundred small services.

The "want ad." gets work for workers and workers for work.

It gets clerks for employers and finds employers for clerks. It brings together buyer and seller, and enables them to do business though they may be thousands of miles apart.

The "want ad." is the great force in the small affairs and incidents of daily life.

A representative of the Procter & Gamble Company calls on you, not merely to take your orders, but to help you to resell Procter & Gamble goods at a fair profit to yourself.

The Procter & Gamble man is more than a salesman. He is a man well trained in the best methods of retail selling. He knows conditions; he knows how other successful grocers are working; and he knows the exact value of the goods he is selling.

Consider him as a business counsellor—a business friend. Only then can you get a fair idea of what Procter & Gamble service means—only then can you understand fully the interest the Procter & Gamble Company has in your success.

Increased Duties on Alchol Will Advance the Prices of Extracts

Manufacturers of Extracts Complain of the Duty Placed on Alcohol in the Recent Budget—Two-ounce Bottle of Pure Extract in Retail Stores Will be 15 Cents Higher—Deputation Waits on Sir Henry Drayton, Seeking an Amendment

TORONTO, May 17.—According to manufacturers of extracts, the increase in the duty placed on alcohol in the recent Budget will increase the cost to the consumer, on a two-ounce bottle of pure extract that now sells in the retail stores, 15 cents per bottle—or in other words, the bottle that is now retailed at 25 cents will have to be sold at 40 cents, the difference in the price going to the Government as a tax.

Pure extracts contain a large proportion of alcohol, which is necessary to bring out the delicate flavor of fruit. This alcohol previously cost the manufacturer $8.65 per gallon, but with the additional $9.00 per gallon excise duty, it will cost $17.65 per gallon. Artificial extracts also contain a certain amount of alcohol. This line, although not being affected to such an extent as the pure extracts, will nevertheless have to be advanced, according to the amount of alcohol which it contains. The increase will probably run to 15 or 20 cents per dozen on the small size.

Will Kill Extract Business

Manufacturers claim that if the law is allowed to stand it will practically kill the extract business—that is for the pure quality. "Of course, non-alcoholic extracts can be manufactured, and are being made in a limited way, but the Government is continually endeavoring to discourage the sale of artificial extracts and are doing their utmost by laws and regulations to encourage the consumption of pure foods. Artificial extracts do not have the fine delicate flavor that the pure article has," according to the statement of one manufacturer.

Favors the Drug Trade

Druggists and perfume manufacturers, however, are not required to pay the additional excise duty. Extract manufacturers claim that this is a discrimination against their business, as it will permit druggists to manufacture —and many of them are making extracts—and to sell at a lower price than the regular manufacturer, because they will escape the additional tax.

Just as Necessary as Salt

"I consider extracts just as necessary to foods as salt is to meat," stated a manufacturer. "Puddings, cakes and other products of the kitchen would certainly be very unpalatable without the addition of some kind of flavoring and undoubtedly the true flavor is the best. But if people were compelled to pay 40 cents for a bottle of extract that they had been in the habit of buying for 25 cents, it would have a tendency to drive them to the use of artificial extracts, which I consider would be bad for the public.

"We have invested large sums in our plant and have spent years in building up our business. But if we are levied the additional duty the greatest portion of the business will go to manufacturers of pharmaceutical preparations, simply because they only pay $2.40 per gallon duty on alcohol. They can manufacture pure extracts at a considerably lower price than we can, who are required to pay the additional excise duty of $9.00 per gallon.

Wait on Finance Minister

A deputation of extract manufacturers recently waited upon Sir Hendry Drayton and discussed the various points brought out in the above article. No definite answer was received, but Sir Henry stated that he would go into the matter very carefully and consider it. In the meantime, awaiting a decision, manufacturers are proceeding as before.

Want the Tax Absorbed in Invoice

Some Retail Grocers Want Tax Included in List Price—Millers Think Future of Package Cereals Lies Largely With Retailer—Why is Grapefruit Singled Out?

By Staff Correspondent of Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL.—(Special). — Some retail grocers here have taken, along one line, an antagonistic attitude to the new system of taxation. Their grievance seems to be in the system and not particularly in the revised list of taxable goods. C. J. White, proprietor of the Ayrshire Grocery, 1280 Wellington St., Montreal, said that he had discussed this matter with some of his fellow grocers and they felt that the government should realize the retailer's position and help him hold his own against the neglect or short-sightedness on the part of some retail grocers that will eventually result in the grocer having to pay the whole tax out of his own pocket.

Will Grocers Have to Pay?

"I would much prefer," he declared, "to see the whole tax absorbed in the list price as quoted to the retailer by the wholesaler or manufacturer. From past experience many of us know that there are grocers who will look at their invoices, calculate their cost per article and make their selling price without reckoning in the sales tax either because they do not feel that it is part of the cost or because they intend to neglect it for the sole purpose of cutting prices. This evil has already gone a long way in the grocery business and the profit is now very small in most lines. If the tax was included in the invoice price I am sure that to a great extent this evil would be avoided."

The Duty on Grapefruit

One of the items that has caused much discussion among the trade is the imposition of a duty on grapefruit in contrast to oranges and other imported fruits, which are exempt. The question naturally arises as to why the government chose to make the distinction. It will be noticed that grapefruit imported direct from the West Indies or other British possessions is given a preference amounting to fifty cents per hundredweight. Fruit men here say there is no means of obtaining a shipment of grapefruit direct from the British West Indies at the present time and the shipments made to Montreal or to this district are not large enough at any one time to warrant any company chartering a vessel for this particular product. Nor is there at present any plan in sight whereby co-operation importers could pool their imports and make it worth while having a direct line from Montreal to the West Indies.

W. S. Stewart, manager of Peterson Fruit Company, Limited, of Montreal, in speaking to Canadian Grocer representative about the duty on grapefruit, said: "To me it is absolutely absurd to think that the government has made this distinction between grapefruit and other imported fruits from an economical standpoint, or from the standpoint that they were dealing fairly with the Canadian public. It would seem to be far more fair to the people in general if a small tax was levied on all imported fruits and as a result even a larger revenue would be obtained. I cannot understand why grapefruit is singled out and taxed, except that it may appear to the government that grapefruit is a luxury for the rich man's table. The shipments of grapefruit received in Montreal in comparison with the shipments of oranges, pineapples and bananas are very small. So small that it would hardly seem worth while for any company to consider having direct shipments from Jamaica or from other British West Indian ports. At some seasons of the year there are shipments coming to Canadian ports, but not direct to Montreal. Consequently, the preference given to imports from British possessions in so far as it affects grapefruit is almost negligible. The result is that the retailer may expect an additional cost of from 75c to 80c per case on grapefruit. I cannot say, however, that the added cost will cut down the sale of grapefruit. That remains to be seen. To the public it may mean one or two cents more per fruit."

Tax Soon Forgotten

When asked by Canadian Grocer representative if he felt that the duty on grapefruit would curtail its sale, Geo. A. Vipond, managing director of T. S. Vipond Co., Ltd., fruit importers, of Montreal, said that it was hard to say definitely what the effect will be. "In the majority of cases," he stated, "it will mean 75 or 80 cents added to the cost. In the case of the fruit imported from British West Indies it will mean an advance of 40 cents a case. If it will only mean an advance of a cent or two cents per fruit to the public I do not think that there will be any noticeable change in the sale. To a great extent the result lies with the retailer. If he is quite satisfied with the profit he is now getting I feel sure that the advance will be hardly noticed by the consumer. The grapefruit season is very nearly over, probably in a few months the tax will be forgotten altogether."

Since the government has seen fit to levy the tax on package cereals, that is in packages weighing less than 48 pounds, it is evident that it will increase the cost to the consumer, in some cases not only to the amount of three per cent. as the two levies of the tax will be, but no doubt by a greater amount which will be determined by the retail grocers themselves. On this point hinges the question as to whether or not the sale of package ceerals will be curtailed.

Increase Per Package Small

G. W. Stepan, assistant sales manager of the Robin Hood Milling Co. at Montreal, said to Canadian Grocer representative: "The increased cost per package of rolled oats, for example, should be so small that if adhered to I am sure would not materially hurt the sale of that cereal in packages. The present cost per case for the large size is $5.00. The retailer will be paying an aggregate tax of three per cent., which will bring up the price to $5.15 per case, which is an advance of ¾ cent a package. If the result is only one cent added to the cost to the consumer I do not think that the sale will be damaged. In fact I am led to believe that owing to the present keen competition on the market that the ¾ of a cent may disappear. After all the outcome lies with the retail grocer."

Representation At Ottawa

The president of the Canadian National Millers' Association, Fred C. Cornell, went to Ottawa early this week to voice the protest of the millers against the taxation of their manufactured products. According to the ruling of the government, rolled oats is subject to the sales tax in any sized package and the packages of other cereals, flour, etc., which includes many lines, weighing less than 48 pounds. It will be seen that the millers' products are subject to a good deal of taxation.

RETAILER WILL ONLY PAY ONE AND A HALF PER CENT. TAX ON TEA

Discussing the tax of two and one half per cent. on importations of teas, one large importer and distributor of tea told Canadian Grocer that it was not this company's intention to pass this tax along to the retailer. The only tax that the retailer will have to pay is the wholesaler's tax of one and a half per cent. Other wholesalers are absorbing this sales tax of 2½ per cent. on teas.

"Would Have Been Better to Have Increased Duty on Teas and Coffees"

Henry Swan, of Swan Bros., King Street E., Toronto, Believes Such a Course Would Have Been Better Than Adding Sales Tax—"A Stupid Thing Taxing Flour"

DISCUSSING the changes in the sales taxes as affecting the grocery trade, Henry Swan, of Swan Bros., one of the oldest grocers in Toronto, expressed the opinion that in the case of tea, for instance, it would have been better had the Government increased the duty on tea two cents per pound, that is from seven cents to nine cents, rather than impose the sales tax. He believes that in the case of both tea and coffee, it would have been better to have increased the duty. In this way, the extra duty would have been so easily absorbed, that there would have been less expense in its collection, and importers and wholesalers would have had nothing more to do than to pay the added duty.

"As retailers we have to pay four per cent. sales tax on importations," remarked Mr. Swan, "but we have always done a wholesale as well as a retail business. Reckoning the sales tax of four per cent. to importing retailers, it practically means on an article selling at 50 cents per pound an additional two cents. The consumer will, of course, have to pay this, but while the public will eventually pay it, I do not believe it will make much difference. It will be absorbed and as prices readjust themselves to pre-war levels, it will not be noticed in the lower prices. We have not made any changes in our prices as a result of this tax. Canned goods that were not previously taxed are now subject to it, but we have had our supplies bought, so there is no reason for adding to present quotations. The same is true of a number of lines where we have sufficient stock on hand. We have changed none of our prices and do not contemplate doing so. I think it will be a while before we have to reckon this sales tax in our prices.

Calls It Stupid

"I think putting the sales tax on small packages of flour, that is on bags of 48 pounds and under, is a stupid thing. A tax might just as well have been placed on potatoes. One is just as much a necessity as the other, and I think the Government would have been wisely advised to have left flour as before. A great deal of flour is bought in small packages, and I believe it would have been better to have left the tax off flour altogether."

The Consumer Must Pay

"Somebody has to pay these taxes, and I do not know who else it will be, if not the consumer," Mr. Reeves, of Michie & Co., King Street West, Toronto, told Canadian Grocer. "We have not changed any of our prices as yet, because of the increased sales tax, but in some way we will have to add it on to the prices to the consumer, but I do not think that it will be noticed, to the extent of making any appreciable difference to the public. The people will pay the added amount willingly."

"Make the Placing of Sales Tax on Invoice Compulsory"

A Number of Manufacturers as Well as the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association Believe it Would Have Been Better to Have Left the Law as it Was in This Regard

THAT the placing of the sales tax on the invoice, as has been the case since it was first instituted, should be be made compulsory is the opinion of a number of manufacturers and wholesalers. In fact, it is stated that one association of manufacturers has already made representations to Sir Henry Drayton with a view to having the law in this regard amended, compelling all manufacturers, importers and wholesalers to show this tax on the invoice. It is claimed by some manufacturers that leaving it optional may mean that some will charge it and others won't, with a difference of prices the result, rendering it unfair for those who were strictly adhering to the policy of charging it on the invoices.

Put It On All Invoices

"It was best the way it was before," A. C. Pyke, secretary of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, told Canadian Grocer. "As an association we would prefer to mark the sales tax on each invoice, letting the purchaser know in each instance what the tax is and leaving prices unchanged, as far as the actual quotations on the goods is concerned. The Wholesale Grocers' Association believes that in the interests of all concerned it would have been better for the Government to have left the act as it was in this regard."

Does Price Include Tax?

As it was pointed out by one manufacturer who sells direct to the retail trade, as well as to the wholesale trade, that in having to charge the retailer 3 per cent. on all sales, he believed this was an unfair advantage for the wholesaler who only charged 1½ per cent., and did not have to show it on the invoice if he did not care to do so. In a matter of 3 per cent. it was practically a necessity to show it, as it was too big an item to overlook.

It would be well for the retailer, in all instances, to ascertain if the price quoted to them included the sales tax, or if it would be stated on the invoice separate from the actual price.

Wholesalers in Montreal Want Tax on Invoice

Montreal (Special).—On Monday of this week the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild held a meeting in the board room of the Board of Trade to discuss the working of the new taxation system as brought forward last week by Sir Henry Drayton. The chair was occupied by the president of the guild, Eugene Couvrette, managing director of Couvrette-Sauriot, Ltee., wholesale grocers. Among those present were Z. Hebert, Arthur Birks, C. J. Ciceri, Messrs. Deschatelets, Carter, Legault, Grenier, Grendereau, and the secretary, H. C. Beatty.

Want Sales Tax on Invoice.

It was the unanimous opinion of those present that it was to the best interests of the wholesale grocers to have the sales tax specified on each invoice and not absorbed in the list price, as a number of manufacturers have already commenced to do. It was pointed out that, according to the act of last year the tax had to be shown as a separate item on each invoice. This was stipulated a year ago, but this new act strikes out entirely this section and no stipulation is made as to how the tax shall be shown. In fact, a telegram from Ottawa in reply to this question stated that the manufacturers, wholesalers and jobbers might absorb the tax in their invoice price.

Want Specified System.

The wholesale grocers here desire a uniform system and think that if this is not done there will be considerable difficulty in keeping track of the lines on which the tax is included in the price and those for which a special item has to be made. They claim that the failure to adopt a uniform system will result in a muddle. They prefer an itemized statement of the tax on the grounds that the absorption of the tax in the list price would lead in a number of cases to a misunderstanding of the advance, and in other cases an unduly increased cost. Furthermore, it would foster price-cutting which they believe is now altogether too prevalent in the grocery business.

Voices Protest.

As the result of the meeting the following telegram was sent to Ottawa by the secretary of the guild:

"Sir Henry Drayton.—The members of this guild are unanimous in the opinion that the manufacturers and wholesalers or jobbers should be required to add a separate item on their invoices the amount of the sales tax in the same manner as formerly."

Thinks the Changes in Retail Prices Will be Hardly Noticeable

J. Hunter White, Secretary of the New Brunswick Branch of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, Discusses Changes in Budget

ST. JOHN, N.B., May 13 (Special).—As is usual, following the enactment of legislation affecting the prices of commodities, there is some confusion here in regard to the new budget changes, and the effect on retail prices has not yet been exactly determined. In the opinion of J. Hunter White, secretary of the New Brunswick branch of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, however, the result in changes of retail prices will hardly be noticeable.

Tea Prices Probably Unaffected

In the opinion of one of the largest dealers in the city, the extra tax on tea will be absorbed by the importer, wholesaler and retailer and the consumer would pay the usual price. Most of the tea sold in St. John is in packages at fixed prices of 55 to 75 cents, and since the increase would not justify an additional five cents, it is not considered advisable to add an uneven amount.

Surprise at Flour Tax

Surprise was expressed that a tax had been put on 24-pound bags of flour, while larger quantities, whether in bags or barrels, had been exempt. It is felt that, whereas the poorer people are the chief purchasers of flour in the smaller quantities, the tax tends only to increase their burden. It is thought that it would have been preferable to have reversed this order.

Some Questions on the Budget Are Answered

New York Inquiry.—Would you kindly advise me what the new sale tax is on package tea sold in Canada; also if there is an extra tax on the same commodity imported into Canada, outside of the regular duty?

Answer. — Under the new Canadian budget there is a sales tax of 2½ per cent. on all tea imported into Canada by wholesalers and tea packers. When imported direct by a retailer the sales tax is 4 per cent. Tea packers here are securing wholesalers' licenses or have secured them.

There is an additional sales tax on all tea of 1½ per cent. from wholesaler to retailer, which is collected from the wholesaler by the Government. If a wholesaler, or a tea packer with a wholesaler's license, sells to another wholesaler the sales tax is 1½ per cent. and there is an additional 1½ per cent. when that wholesaler sells to a retailer.

Question. — "If one wholesaler sells some goods to another, does the former have to charge the sales tax and pay it to the Government?"

Answer.—Yes, this sales tax has to be paid to the Government, as well as when sale is made from wholesaler to retailer.

Editor's Note. — This question arose between a tea packer having a wholesaler's license and a wholesale grocer. In such a case the wholesale tea firm would charge the 1½ per cent. tax to the wholesale grocer and the wholesale grocer would charge 1½ per cent. to the retailer.

Question.—Will you please give a list of foods that are still exempt from the sales tax, and also the ones that are now subject to it, and that were previously exempt.

Answer.—Under the new Revenue Act the following grocery lines only are exempt from the sales tax. All other goods dealt in by wholesale grocers are subject to sales tax of 1½ per cent.

Beans, Dried. Butter. Butterine. Cheese. Cottolene. Chicory. Crisco. Eggs.

Flour in packages of 48 pounds or over. This includes wheat, rye, buckwheat, corn, potato, rice and sago flour. Fruits, Fresh. Grains in their natural state. Hay. Honey. Hops. Lard. Lard Compound. Margarine. Mazola Oil. Meats, Fresh. Molasses.

Oatmeal in packages of 48 pounds or over. This does not include rolled oats, which the department rules are subject to sales tax in any size packages. Oleomargarine. Peanut Butter. Peas, Dried, but not Split Peas. Poultry, Fresh. Seeds in their natural state. Straw. Sugar, including Maple Sugar. Vegetables, Fresh.

A large list of goods formerly exempt are now taxable, including pot and pearl barley, rolled oats, canned goods of all kinds, starch, tea, coffee, jams, yeast, rice, salt, smoked and pickled meats.

It would be well for retailers to keep a list of the above in easy consultation of their clerks and so it can be easily consulted when buying.

Question.—Is it necessary to note the sales tax on each invoice?

Answer.—Heretofore it has been necessary to place the sales tax on the invoice, both manufacturers and wholesalers having followed such a procedure up until the new budget was brought down. It is not compulsory to do so, as will be noted elsewhere in this issue.

Vancouver Inquiry.—Please advise us as once by wire if the new budget provides for sales tax on teas and coffees.

Answer. — Having answered directly by wire, it might be just as well to state in these columns that both teas and coffees are now subject to the sales tax of 2½ per cent., that is the tax that wholesalers must pay on imported goods. Retailers or consumers importing teas or coffees direct must pay 4 per cent.

Duty is Reckoned on 50% of Par Value

On all goods imported from countries where the exchange rate has fallen below fifty per cent. the duty is now reckoned on fifty per cent. of the par value, instead of on the actual current value. For instance, an article costing 100 lire would cost $5.75 in Canadian money previous to the new tariff regulations, the lire being worth to-day in Canada 5¾ cents. The par value of the lire is 19.30 cents. With the government reckoning duty on fifty per cent. of the par value of the lire, or on 9.65, granting that the duty was for example 30 per cent. on this particular article, the importer of this article, costing 100 lire, would have to pay 2.89½ duty. The article laid down in Canada would cost $8.64½.

No reduction in excess of 50 per cent. of the standard or proclaimed value will be allowed, no matter what the exchange rate is. Where the rate of exchange is adverse to Canada, the value for duty will be computed at the rate of exchange existing at the date of the shipment of the goods.

1914 Prices Now Rule on Chocolates

New Scale of Taxation More Nearly Approaches Equitable Treatment Than the Old—Confectionery Has Been Relieved of an Oppressive and Discriminating Burden to the Net Extent of 9 Per Cent.

By W. H. C. McEACHERN

CONFECTIONERY, particularly "package chocolates," has become so important a part of the grocer's business that possibly a few words as to how this commodity is affected by the change in the internal (I almost said infernal) taxation might be of interest to the readers of Canadian Grocer.

As usual, the revised sales tax, as brought down in Sir Henry Drayton's budget, falls on the producers and consumers, while those who sell what is usually called "service," and which generally is not, apparently escape. Even the excess profits tax is taken from their shoulders. Banks, trust companies, financial institutions, insurance companies, telephone and telegraph corporations, railway and express companies, street railways, electric and gas companies, etc., are thus exempt from the taxes which are being enjoyed by the rest of us, except, of course, as to whatever measure in which they may be affected as consumers.

Why such large and conspicuously profitable enterprises should not share the burden with the manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and consumers is somewhat difficult to understand. Possibly it is because the equitable collection of a broadly applied business tax is beyond the capacity of the machinery at the command of the Inland Revenue Department. That difficulty was encountered in the operations of the now deceased and unmourned luxury tax, even though its application was exceedingly limited.

Effect on Chocolate Industries

The excess profits tax may have been difficult to defend as it was applied to the business of the past few years, during which some concerns because of abnormal conditions made unusual profits in some years. They were not permitted to make any emergency reserve to care for the equally abnormal losses which they later suffered on a declining market because of shrinkage of inventory and the contracted volume of business, and they were ofttimes placed in a very serious position. These objections apply with much fuller force to those engage in manufacturing and mercantile pursuits—the same citizens who are no being called upon to bear the increased sales tax—than they do to the condition of such financial and service corporations which would seem to be exempt under the revised scheme of taxation.

However, there would seem to be little profit in now railing at the form of taxation, the budget having already been brought down and bidding fair to be enacted into law. What we are now interested in is the immediate effect the revised taxation will have upon the confectionery and chocolate industries.

Saving to the Public

In its relation to the confectionery industry, the new scale of taxation more nearly approaches equitable treatment than the old. Our products are relieved of an oppressive and discriminating burden to the net extent of 9 per cent., and this is something to be grateful for. The old luxury tax of 10 per cent. and the sales tax of 2 per cent. made a cumulative tax of 12 per cent. which was generally passed on to the consumer, amounting to some 18 or 20 per cent. The tax is now 3 per cent., which will possibly become when included in the merchants' cost 4½ or 5 per cent. to the consumer. Thus it would seem that there will be an average net saving of about 15 per cent. in the price to the public.

As applied to 1-cent, 5-cent and 10-cent goods, there is an increase of 1 per cent. as these lines were not formerly subject to the 10 per cent. luxury tax. This increased sales tax will most likely be absorbed somewhere along the line and will effect no change to the public. As applied to bulk chocolates, and other fine confectionery specialties, the average change of price to the public will be about 6 cents per pound. Just what the change in any particular item will be, will, of course, depend on the price of that particular item. The result of the price change as applied to bulk goods, sold by the pound, may most favorably affect the retailer's profit.

It is on fine package candy that the greatest price benefit will be obtained. Some of the leading manufacturers of this class of goods determined some nine or ten months ago when costs were at the apex to make price reductions which meant practically the absorption of the luxury tax, and maintained the sale price to the public at the same level as before the application of the tax. These same manufacturers who are the leaders of thought in this industry have now determined that the elimination of this most offensive tax should be met by a reduction in the price of the goods themselves, thus achieving a full return to prices of 1914 on these fine packages.

Volume and overhead—very important factors of cost—are the thought behind this progressive action, and a very greatly increased volume of business should be the result when the public realize that their favorite package of chocolates for which they paid $1 in 1914 can again be purchased for that price.

The Retailer's Co-operation

The realization of that hoped-for result depends, of course, to an exceedingly great extent on the co-operation of the merchant. The courageous policy of the manufacturers would seem to deserve the support of the merchants. Indeed any merchant would be the greatest loser should he withhold this co-operation as he could not hope to benefit by the buying reaction on the part of the consumer. He would fail to cash in on the fact that fine chocolates are the first commodity to make full return to prices of 1914.

CROSSE & BLACKWELL COMPANIES

London, Eng.—At the first annual meeting of Crosse and Blackwell, Ltd., held here recently, R. Just Boyd, the chairman, reviewed the business of the firm. He pointed out that the first amalgamation consisted of the three old companies of Crosse and Blackwell, Ltd., James Keiller and Son, Ltd., and E. Lazenby and Son, Ltd., and it was during the past year that the businesses of Alexander Cairns and Sons and Batger and Co. had been acquired. The Cosmelli Packing Co., Ltd., and Robert Kellie and Son, Ltd., were other companies, the former being a manufacturing company in Spain, and the latter an engineering company in Scotland. There had been a serious set back in trade all over the world, but there was a slightly improving tendency at the present time. During the early months of the present year the company's export sales, in common with those of other manufacturers, had been distinctly disappointing, but the tendency was slowly improving, and he sincerely hoped that before long they would see a recovery in the world's markets.

FINED FOR SELLING ADULTERATED PEPPER TO HULL GROCER

A fine of $25 was paid in Hull police court recently by a Canadian firm for supplying adulterated pepper to J. L. Brunet, grocer of that city. The original charge was laid against Mr. Brunet by Inspector T. Leckie, of the Health Dept., Ottawa. Mr. Brunet offered the defence that he had bought from another party and accordingly action was taken against the wholesaler, with the above result. Costs were paid by the firm and the charge against the Hull grocer withdrawn.

Lifting of Luxury Tax Will Help

Confectionery, Biscuit and Chocolate Industries Meet in Convention in Toronto This Week—James Farquharson, President, Delivers Address, Reviewing Present Conditions in Trade

By Staff Correspondent of Canadian Grocer

TORONTO, May 17.—The third annual convention of the confectionery, biscuit and chocolate industries opened here today in the King Edward Hotel, with a large number of the manufacturers from all over Canada in attendance. President James Farquharson, of the Montreal Biscuit Co., was in the chair. In presenting his annual address, he referred to the past twelve months as a trying period for trade, and for the confectionery industry in particular.

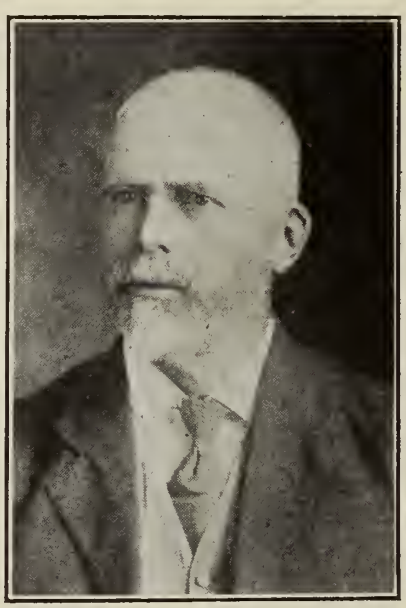
"A year ago," he continued, "you will no doubt remember, our past president very clearly outlined conditions and prospects at that time; we were then confronted with the sugar shortage; that situation was firmly met and gradually adjusted itself. He truly prophesied that the outlook for industry, particularly the confectionery and chocolate industry, would be bad. Shortly after that address, gentlemen, we had to face the memorable budget of May 18 last, in which we were unexpectedly, and as we considered, unjustifiably, burdened with a ten per cent excise tax.

Burden is Lifted.

"I will not dwell on the severe handicap this has been to all of us concerned, coming as it did with a natural reaction, and consequent depression in trade, neither will I discuss at length the steps that your executive committee have taken, and the obstacles that have been overcome, and although our industry has no doubt suffered considerably through this additional burden, we must admit that through the co-operation of our members, and especially of the work accomplished by our secretary and executive committee, the burden was considerably alleviated. To them also is due the full credit for the final abolition of the tax, as it was no doubt due to their hard and consistent efforts, and the clear and efficient manner in which the appeals and representations, embracing vital facts and figures, were laid before the government, that the "powers that be" were prevailed upon to give our industry justice, and at least a fighting chance to pull through a period of trade depression such as we have lately been experiencing.

Discourage Price-Cutting.

"As regards future conditions, while I wish to take an optimistic view, we must go carefully, discourage price-cutting and undue expansion, facing conditions as they are today, and although many of us find it difficult to keep factories running full time, we may take a little comfort from the fact that conditions might be worse. We are fortunate at least in that on this side we have not had to face the severe labor conditions that other countries are experiencing. Our help is more amenable to reason and common sense, realizing that "half a loaf" is certainly better than no bread. The lack of demand for our goods is principally caused through unemployment in other industries, and to assist our other Canadian industries it is our duty to see to it that we buy and encourage others to buy goods "Made in Canada," and so help labor get back into employment, and our factories again to get busy.



James Farquharson, of the Montreal Biscuit Co., who is presiding at the convention.

"In this respect a suggestion made by our secretary, in one of his bulletins, was certainly a valuable one, and if acted on will do considerable to help Canadian trade; that was that we instruct all our travelling salesmen to imbue the merchants and the trade at every opportunity with the benefits of buying merchandise manufactured in Canada.

Needs Business Men.

"The railroad situation, with its yearly deficit under government operation, is a formidable obstacle to our progress. Let us hope that in working out this problem the government may be convinced that the railway business of the country can be better administered by qualified business men, and that government operation is a luxury this country cannot afford.

"In closing, gentlemen, I again wish to commend to you most heartily the great service rendered by your secretary and executive officers. They have faced many trying situations and solved many difficult problems. We have profited very much through their efforts and the co-operation of the members. We owe each one a debt of gratitude."

Selecting Salesmen.

An address on selecting and training salesmen, by Frank E. Mutton, vice-president and general manager of the International Business Machines Co., Ltd., was one of the features of the morning session. Mr. Mutton's address was a practical talk on this all-important subject, and he pointed out the qualifications a salesman should possess. It was not a wise policy to engage a salesman on his first application. He had found that frequently two and three interviews took place before a man was finally engaged. Mr. Mutton outlined the essentials that went to make a good salesman. Character, health, manner and personal appearance were requisites of the first importance, together with a desire to learn and to work. "Very often," Mr. Mutton stated, in the course of his remarks, "some of the finest salesmen have started as clerks in retail stores. Their experience there in meeting the public, and in getting their first ideas in selling, have made them well fitted, with additional training, for salesmen in larger fields, and of a more difficult character."

Entertainment Features.

Following the luncheon at one o'clock, three addresses were given on advertising, E. L. Ruddy speaking on outdoor advertising, J. Coughlin on street car advertising, and Allan Ross on newspaper advertising

The delegates were entertained to a trip around the Toronto harbor during the afternoon. and at 5.30 dinner was served at the Sunnyside Pavilion. The Bowes Co., Ltd., Toronto. entertained the association to a theatre party on Tuesday evening.

"Salesman Should Be Host And the Customer His Guest"

Geo. S. Matthews, Huylers, Limited, in Addressing Confectionery Association at Noon-day Luncheon Talks on Retailing and Present Conditions

SPEAKING to the delegates attending the convention of the confectionery, biscuit and chocolate industries, at the noon-day luncheon of the first day's session, at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, George S. Matthews, of Huyler's Ltd., delivered a forceful address on the subject of retail selling and conditions. Retailing, he began, is selling commodities in small quantities Successful retailing is systemized selling. In all settlements there is a central point of interest, where there is the larger sentiment and general contact. In a city such as Toronto for instance, the central point might be said to be the intersection of Yonge and King Streets, for where two great thoroughfares such as these meet, there is bound to be the greatest number of people. Estimating that 180 people pass this corner every minute, 14,800 people pass it every hour. During half that time that number is increased 50 per cent., making something like twenty-two thousand people instead of 14,800 every hour.

C. J. Bodley, secretary of the Confectionery and Chocolate Manufacturers' Association.

Value of Display

Mr. Matthews then visualized a confectionery store situation adjacent to this corner. Two per cent. of that crowd that passed there every hour would part with some of their earnings in that store, that is, working on the sense of sight to bring about that condition. If people were all blind, such would not be the case. Display attracts the sight, and is a big factor in the retailer's selling. Illuminated exteriors, tastefully arranged interiors, abundant displays of merchandise, all attract people and mean sales. Having attracted the people into the store, the next important thing is the voice of the salesman.

The Voice of the Salesman

It should always be kindly persuasive, and in answering questions he should always be thoroughly informed as to the product he is selling. Mr. Matthews here told of a certain clerk in a grocery store who was asked by a customer as to the nutritive qualities of cocoa. He was unable to tell the value of it as a nutritious article of diet. Mr. Matthews pointed out how this salesman should have been able to tell in detail if necessary the food qualities of cocoa, and had he followed the procedure of removing a tin of cocoa from the shelf, and while not mentioning or speaking of the brand, by frequently holding it before the customer, or pointing to it with his finger, he would not only have sold the cocoa, but would have created in the mind of the customer the desire to possess a tin of the particular brand he had held before her.

The Salesman a Host.

A salesman should look upon himself as a host, and his customer as his guest. In such an attitude only is the proper relation between dealer and customer carried out. Make retailing a sport, and the greatest sport to make it is angling. Go fishing for customers, but be a true

Convincing Customers of Price Declines

Grocery Commodities at Present Values Should Stimulate Buying —Recessions Have Been Gradual With the Exception of the Drastic Reductions on Potatoes, Sugar, Butter and Eggs

"I CANNOT see where the newspapers get all this stuff about foods being down in price," remarked the lady of the house to her husband one evening. "It costs me just as much to supply the table to-day as it did last year, and to read the papers you would think prices were down about half."

"Then you are either terribly extravagant or else you must be buying from a store which has been caught with a big stock and have not yet reduced their prices," answered the husband, who was enjoying the after-effects of a good dinner with his evening paper and the friendly pipe. "Take a piece of paper, Mary, and figure out the prices you were paying on twelve or fifteen articles a year ago with the price to-day and you will find that you are just paying about 40 per cent. less."

Does this answer the question that many retail merchants have been asking themselves when they are off by themselves in a quiet corner? Does it give the answer to the conundrum, why are customers curtailing their purchases? Undoubtedly it does. Many people are still under the impression that they are paying just as much for goods to-day as they were when prices were at the peak.

Most Recessions Gradual

The majority of merchants have reduced their prices, and many have been taking a big loss in the process of remarking prices in accordance with replacement values.

With perhaps the big reduction on potatoes and sugar and the recent drastic cut in the price of butter and eggs, the recessions have been gradual, often a cent or two at a time until, at the present time, picking out 28 food commodities we find that the wholesale decline, as compared with a year ago, has amounted to 34.8 per cent.

This gradual recession in prices is perhaps another reason why the general public is not aware of the fact that their dollar to-day is purchasing one-third more goods than it was buying at this same time last year. Then if the purchasing power of the dollar is greater than it has been, the merchant has by far a more powerful instrument by which trade can be stimulated than when prices were being advanced.

Should Stimulate Business

During the period of inflation, merchants were urging customers to buy because the next time the price would be higher. Now that prices are down, it would be a good plan to reverse the tactics. People are susceptible to buy at a lower price. This was proven out by their unlimited purchases during the few years when merchandise was advancing. This buying, however, was always done at a price that apparently was a little lower than market values. Then came the period of witholding purchases, simply because there were indications for lower prices. Prices did drop and are down in many instances to below pre-war values. Some lines, no doubt, have not yet reached the lowest point, while there are some that show tendencies for higher prices.

The fact that values are down should be a stimulus to business. Unquestionably it will be, if the public generally can be convinced on that point. It cannot be expected that there will be heavy buying for the future, such as occurred during the first few months of the war and then again in 1918. It is better that there should not be a repetition of that frantic scrambling to hoard up foodstuffs. What the country needs is a sane steady movement of merchandise that will keep the mills and factories busy and at a price that will show the producer of the raw material at least a just return for his time and investment.

Public Need Is More Light

It lies principally in the hands of the retail merchants to bring about this steady buying movement. Speaking generally, the public are not aware that prices are down as low as they are. Many are still under the impression that they are paying inflated prices and con-

34 PER CENT. DECLINE IN THESE LINES

A SUBSCRIBER writes: "Be good enough to let us know about what percentage general groceries are down since about this time last year."

Picking out twenty-eight grocery commodities, a comparison of prices on May 1, 1920, and the same date this year, shows that the decline amounts to 34.819 per cent. Three lines on the list show a slight increase, namely, canned pumpkin, raisins and sockeye salmon. This decline would even be greater if the peak prices were compared with to-day's, as prices on May 1, 1920, are not by any means the highest. For instance, the highest price on sugar was in August of last year when quotations reached $24. In 1917, the peak price on flour was reached at $16.50 per barrel, cornmeal was $6.40 per bag, canned tomatoes were $2.50 per dozen and canned pumpkin was $1.65 per dozen. Currants in 1918 reached the peak price of 32 cents per pound and tapioca jumped to 15 cents per pound.

The following are the comparative prices on May 1 in the years 1920-21:

Suggestion for a window display that is an education in prices. The display shows the purchasing power of the dollar to-day as compared with a year ago. A display such as this will go a long way towards making customers realize prices are down.

tinue cutting their purchases to the lowest point. This is stimulated to a great extent by the merchants advertising sacrifice sales, leading the public to believe that lower prices are coming, and that the merchant just wishes to clear up his stock before the slump does come and consequently the public are not buying in anywhere near the volume they would under normal conditions.

What the public needs is a little more light along the line that prices are reduced because raw materials, manufacturing and wholesale prices have dropped. Reduction or sensational sales will not stabilize or improve the consumption; they only tend to strengthen the attitude of the public who have been heard to say and are still remarking that, "Oh, well, they kept the price up as long as they could. No use buying to-day. To-morrow we'll buy it for less."

What the public needs is education. Show them that the purchasing power of the dollar is greater because market values are lower and not by any sacrifice or loss of money on part of the merchant. What better example can we get on this point than through the increased consumption of butter and eggs since the drastic declines of a few weeks ago?

A Suggestion to Follow

Advertising and window display will do a lot along this line. As a suggestion, supposing on one side of the window was placed a bag of potatoes and a hundred-pound bag of sugar. The retail value of these two articles one year ago was $32. Then figure out what the same amount of money will buy at to-day's price, and place them at the other side of the window. A large card placed in the center of the window reading "Prices are down! $32 one year ago just bought one bag of sugar and one bag of potatoes. To-day $32 will buy one bag of sugar, one bag of potatoes and 26 other articles. Look them over."

A little education similar to this will tend to stimulate consumption, stabilize buying and will bring confidence to the customer with less chasing around for "reduced prices."

Acreage to Tobacco Not More Than 50 Per Cent. of Last Year

London, Ont.—Not more than 50 per cent. of the usual acreage of tobacco will be planted in this district this year. Owing to the situation resulting from lowered prices a great many farmers are not putting in any tobacco. Instead they are specializing on early vegetables, fruit and grain. Tons of last year's crop are being sent to the plants at Blenheim, Leamington and Kingsville for processing and the growers hope in this way to at least break even. Last year's production costs were unusually high.

As a result of the business that has developed at Leamington in the handling of the farmers' tobacco the Diamond Tobacco Co. has under consideration an expenditure that may reach $100,000 for additional warehouses.

The cigar trade in London is reported by manufacturers to be the best in months. The buyers in the country towns are placing substantial orders and in addition to this the bookings for the summer resort trade are pouring in. Business is away ahead of last year, the manufacturers state. Orders from the West have been most satisfactory and reports from the various centers indicate that business, as far as the cigar trade is concerned, promises to be excellent. There are rumors that another cigar factory is to open in London shortly but so far no names have been mentioned.

Is Optimistic Over Business in the West

J. T. Menzies, general manager of Stewart Menzies Co., Ltd., Foy Building, Toronto, has just returned from a trip to the Pacific coast in the interests of his firm. Mr. Menzies is enthusiastic over the condition of business in the West, and stated that it was very favorable. While in the West he opened two new branch offices of the company, one at Vancouver and the other at Winnipeg. The one at Vancouver will be in charge of George Crawford and G. A. Birks, while the Winnipeg office will be in charge of Howard Menzies with F. Manley.

UNFAIR DISCRIMINATION

MANY druggists and manufacturers of pharmaceutical preparations have been manufacturing for extracts for some time, but the difference in the amount of excise duty levied on alcohol under the recent Budget druggists are required to pay in comparison with the amount levied on alcohol purchased by extract manufacturers will tend to divert the manufacture to the channels of the drug trade. Manufacturers of extracts claim that the increased duty will increase the cost of pure extracts 60 per cent., while druggists will be able to manufacture with practically no advance.

From the retail grocers' viewpoint this is a discrimination against their business. Extracts have always been a standard line in grocery stores, but if druggists are able to manufacture and sell at a lower price, the public naturally will purchase their extracts where they can buy them at lower prices. Undoubtedly this is a point that Sir Henry Drayton overlooked in revising the tariff and one which extract manufacturers hope to have remedied.

BEATING THE COFFEE PEDDLER

RECENTLY a western grocer realized that he was selling a small portion of his customers their coffee, and upon investigation he found that two coffee peddlers were making weekly trips to his town and had practically cornered all the coffee business. How to win back this trade was a question that caused this merchant many anxious moments. The more he thought about it, the more strongly he was convinced that some plan must be devised to eliminate this competition. He launched a campaign that caused the peddlers to take notice. They had to work a little harder to get business. After one month one of the peddlers discontinued visiting the town, and the other instead of making a weekly trip was only making it every two weeks. Finally this peddler also discontinued and the coffee peddler menace was ultimately wiped out.

The plan devised by this merchant was a simple one, but it meant a lot of hard work and perseverance. His plan was to make coffee the chief topic in his store and everyone urged to concentrate on the selling of coffee. In one window was installed an electric coffee mill. He received regular weekly shipments of freshly roasted coffee. He then sent a man to call upon every housewife in the community, and offered to all who would purchase coffee in ten pound lots, a special discount of three cents per pound. It was not required, however, that the whole ten pounds were to be purchased at one time, but the housewife had the privilege of taking it out just as required. If the quality of the coffee did not meet with their favor, they were welcome to cancel the complete order. Buying coffee under this method, put it in their homes every few days, freshly roasted and ground.

The coffee peddler menace of many another town throughout Canada is of serious concern to merchants. These peddlers do not pay anything to the support of the places wherein they obtain the large volume of their business. They feed upon the goodwill of merchants who have, in many instanees, spent a lifetime in building up the business community of their town. It is true these peddlers are required to pay a license to do business, but the amount is infinitely small in comparison with the amount of business they get and the amount of taxes that the merchants pay towards the upkeep of he town. The peddler too, is not content to stick to one line, but is gradually working into others, and diverging sales from the legitimate source of distribution, the retail merchant. The experience of this merchant might be followed with equal success by other grocers who are fighting the peddler nuisance.

EDITORIALS IN BRIEF

UNDER the new Budget ruling wholesalers have the option of absorbing the sales tax in the cost of the goods or of placing the sales tax on the invoice as a separate item. Merchants in receiving quotations would be wise to enquire whether the price quoted includes the sales tax.

EXEMPTIONS from the sales tax are now few in number. The tax on small individual articles is not a large amount, but when the turnover on these articles is considered the amount runs into considerable money. The idea of the sales tax is not that it should come out of the merchant's fair profit. The merchant, therefore, should be careful of his mark-up and see that the tax is absorbed in the cost.

SOME merchants state that customers complain of prices not being lower. One of the surest and most convincing arguments to employ is to show what prices were previously when they were at the peak and what they are to-day.

NOW that the luxury tax is off paekaged chocolates, it should be an incentive for the grocer to push box candy with greater vigor than ever before. The summer months provide a good time to sell candy, as many grocers are now increasing their revenue by adding such lines as ice cream and box candy.

their lists. This indeed, was an outstanding feature of the contest, which reflects great credit upon the retail merchants and clerks of Canada.

At every step the impartiality of the judging was safeguarded. The judges, in fact, were unaware of the names of the entrants when checking up the lists, by reason of the fact that each list on its arrival was given a number.

It is safe to assume that to thousands in Canada, the words DAYTON SCALES will mean more than they ever have heretofore — to mention them will be to call up a pleasant recollection of this clean-cut, wholesome, educational contest.

Offers Solution of Merchant's Dilemma

General Merchant in Western Canada Seeks Advice—Some Sane Suggestions in Order That He May Get From Under—He is Advised to "Stick" to the Game

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

DEAR SIR:—I ask your advice as to whether I should stay in business here or seek new pastures. Briefly, to relate my history: I started in business here without the slightest shred of mercantile experience. I bought a general store and stock for $14,000 and paid down $2,500—all I had. Then with the help of two clerks I started in to do a credit business. Not having experience, one clerk did the buying and arranged prices. At the end of the first year I found out I had an unscrupulous clerk. He had arranged with others to overbuy and then buy in the wreck when I went broke. However, I got next too soon and, while I got a large stock in, I cancelled a large portion. I then had to do my own buying and have done it since. I have built up a business from $25,000 my first year to $880,000 last year and my small capital has grown until I now have, by close calculation, about $11,000 equity. It is not a lot, and yet my first year being a distinct loss I consider that fair for six years.

After reading your articles and attending the short course for merchants I went to work to find out exactly what my liabilities and assets were and to know exactly what is my monthly expense, and I am astonished and discouraged; for, on figuring everything, as stock received on spring order and accounts not due for four months, I owe in round figures $20,000. My stock amounts to about $19,000 and last year my turnover was a little better than $80,000.

I have an idea that the load is too heavy and that the best thing I can do is to get from under and start again somewhere with my experience as an asset as I surely have the experience now. Or do you think it possible to go to work in a good district like this and get from under? I get good margins. On groceries I divide cost price by 80, on shoes and dry goods I divide the cost by 60 and 65. Anyway, I would appreciate your opinion insofar as you can express it with the information you have.

I have accounts due me of $10,000 but am unable to collect now and the bulk of it I will not get until fall.

Yours very truly,
UNEASY.

Never Say Die!

Why give up? If your experience is an asset, it has been bought at a high price. To realize on it at anything near value, use it yourself! If you could sell it to others, you could not get nearly as much for it as you can make it worth in your own business. That is the real place to cash it in.

If your stock is taken at cost, then you have $19,000 stock, plus $10,000 book accounts, a face value of $29,000, plus an established business, equipped with fixtures and appliances. That is not merely a respectable equity, but it is equity ready to use in the task of digging out—and you can do it!

First: Quit buying. I mean that as literally as it is possible to make it. It means buy only for fill-ins and in the smallest quantities. Do not buy a dozen if you only sell six in a month. Do not buy two cases if a case will carry you until the next lot can be got in. Lean over backwards in the task of saying "No" to every offer of goods.

Second: Increase your mark-up wherever possible. You have been in business six years . You must by now know that your rate of twenty per cent. is insufficient on many, many lines of grocery items. Why, one of the most important causes of grocery failure to make money is this lazy rule of thumb method of having a fixed, hard-and-fast percentage which is never exceeded! I am emphasizing this fact that it is not exceeded, because any number of exigencies compel it to be lessened on large quantities of groceries. Revise your prices upward with diligence and your keenest judgment. Do not think that a price is not raised if it is raised only a cent on some things; because one cent added to a fifteen-cent item increases the margin by over six per cent. Six per cent. on $80,000 sales is $4,800. Therefore, if you thus increase your earnings by slight fractions on half your sales you will thereby get in $2,400 extra velvet in a year.

I do not know about shoes and dry goods, except that the average shoe expense is around 24 per cent.; that with that expense there are many items necessarily sold on a basis that does not return cost, expense and profit. Hence, here, too, study to see where you can make up things a fraction higher.

Dry goods expense is about the same as shoes. This line has white goods and certain other things which are sold below the cost of operation. Therefore, you must get a price sufficient on other things to cover and leave a profit on the whole, or you will fail. So, while 35 to 40 per cent. looks like a liberal general margin, it is far insufficient for many things. Is this not right here one of your main weakness? I suspect it is.

On Luxuries, Margin Must Be Big

On extreme style goods, your margin cannot be too wide. It is proper, indeed, it is no more than safe—to get 50, 60, 70 per cent. on such lines. I cannot give specific figures, because I do not know your store and stock, so I must indicate in general terms. But I say emphatically, get higher prices wherever you can.

Third: Collect. Collect just as diligently as you possibly can. What you cannot get now, work on steadily until the time comes for it to be paid. Then get the money!

Meantime, during the waiting period, do this: Go over each account among the long-winded ones. Use a fine tooth comb on them. Study not only whether the people have paid promptly at the season end in the past, but whether the account has paid you any net profit. If the person has been slow or dilatory, that is sufficient reason to cut him off the minute the bill is paid. Also cut him off after he has made a big payment at the season end even if he has not paid in full. Take your loss while it is small rather than wait until it gets big.

But there is more to this. Take your evenings to study the character of those accounts, item by item. Dig into them to see if even the ones that have paid promptly have earned any net profit for you. Go over the sales slips and find whether any profitable items are included. Many a customer buys much, but the bill does not pay for the service rendered because the goods are uniformly low in grade and narrow of margin.

As you do this, make notation right on the bill—in a secret cipher of your own—so that you will know that account is not to be continued after it is paid. Do that now, so you may not be influenced by any consideration other than your own true interest later on.

Is No Child's Play

As you do this, realize that it is a life and death matter. You must be as inflexible as iron in your determination, or you will not win out.

When any account is paid that you have decided to close, close it. Tell the customer that there will be no more credit. Say that you find you have to curtail credits, that times are too close, and you have not the capital, that you have to draw in. Then if pressed too hard, as when one will say: "You continue to trust Hanscom—why not me—why cut me out?" you can come back

PURE FOOD SHOW IN VANCOUVER PROVES ATTRACTIVE

Vancouver (Special). — A pure food show is being conducted in Vancouver at the present time designed to increase the public knowledge of the variety and excellence of the foods of local manufacture. Space in the permanent exhibit of British Columbia manufacturers is being used. The diversity of the local enterprises is a matter of astonishment to most citizens. While British Columbia canned fish and knitted goods, peanut-butter and apples are standards of excellence throughout the Dominion, there are a myriad of small industries ranging from needle threaders to gramophones springing up to bid for public patronage.

Improvement Is Reported in Market For Canned Salmon

Vancouver, B.C., May 17.—Fred Gosse, manager the Canadian branch of this San Francisco firm, stated that recently there had been a marked improvement in the canned salmon market. Besides fairly large orders for domestic trade there is a decided movement in the export salmon business, several large deals in pinks and chums having been consummated in recent weeks. The settlement of European conditions, taken together with improved European exchange, is stimulating the trade with the Continent, and canned fish and fruits are among staple purchases.

and say that Hanscom's account is very profitable and yours is not! It is necessary to be as courteous and non-committal as possible in these matters—but remember that a customer who does not pay you does not need too great diplomacy. He is not worth having, so do not worry too much about how he is going to "feel." Your feelings if you fail won't be very pleasant!

Fourth: Cut all expenses! Work as you never worked in your life before. Cut out every penny that is not absolutely necessary—and be sure your judgment is not warped on what is necessary. Try to find ways to eliminate expense. Cut out help, lights, service—everything you possibly can.

Thus, by keeping your head level and seeing that you get as wide margins as the traffic will bear, by discontinuing buying, by opening no new accounts—absolutely none in any circumstances!—by collecting diligently and by cutting every expense, you can win out.

In this way you can take out of your stock — at fuller margins — enough to meet your bills as they fall due. And as you do this, look ever ahead to the day when they will all be paid, with the determination that, when that day comes, you will buy only what you can discount afterwards! Never mind if you have carried $20,000 stock. Cut it down to $7,000 and let it not get bigger than that except as it may be purchased on a cash-discount plan. Be your own boss at any price!

Eternal Vigilance the Price

Everlasting diligence, watchfulness that takes no chances and takes nothing for granted are some of the elements of success. This discipline through which you are going is no whit more trying or severe, no more grinding or insistent, than was that under which I labored when I got onto my feet the first time.

One of the surest ways to accomplish it is to make your decisions beforehand. As you go over your bills, your accounts outstanding, your cash, determine what you will do to-morrow, and what will be your course with each account. If you do this, your judgment will be sound, for it will be uninfluenced. Then if ever in doubt, give yourself the benefit of the doubt. Get over the habit of thinking of the other fellow for a while! Think of yourself and the obligation you owe yourself to succeed.

It is a hard row to hoe, but by no means is it in impossible soil. Like things have been done times untold before. They will be done again. You can do it—for yourself, not another—go to it!

Big Tourist Trade Will Help.

Speaking of business conditions, Mr. Matthews said that they were in the minds of many very poor at the present time. "But how could they be otherwise?" he asked, "when the whole world is unsettled. A man borrows one hundred dollars from a friend, and gives him an I.O.U. for it. Both believe they have one hundred dollars. One then becomes frightened, and on the I.O.U. borrows another one hundred dollars from someone else. That in a measure is the situation in the world today. I can see some early redress here in Canada if the harvests are bountiful, and if, too, we can attract tourists in large numbers to our country during the summer months. If we have good retailers, keen to business opportunity, we can do this. Let us be patient, and things will right themselves. Persons of exalted character are needed in times like these, and with proper guidance living will again be normal."

"The Retail Trade is the Sales Force"

British Columbia Manufacturers Are Told Why "Buy Made-in-B.C. Products" Campaign Has Not Made Greater Headway—Retail Support and Advertising Are Essentials to Successful Marketing

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER (Special). — After four months of effort along the lines of "Buy Made in B.C. Products" the British Columbia manufacturers, at a banquet in the Hotel Vancouver, on the evening of May 6, decided that they had not made sufficient headway.

The manager of the "Made in B.C. Campaign," Bruce McKelvie, has "done the impossible." He has able committees which have worked along the lines that their titles imply; "Made in B.C. Day Committee," also a "Made in B.C. Night Committee," and committee on "Education" and a committee on "Extension Work." As usual, a live handful of men have thrown into the effort the ability and industry that have made them successful as individuals.

Some Simple Truths

"Why, then, has not greater success crowned our efforts?" they ask.

Bruce McKelvie told the manufacturers a few simple truths about the "why" and these truths were supplemented by George Hougham, secretary of the British Columbia board, Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, who was a guest. Mr. McKelvie told the manufacturers that up to date they had spent too little on advertising. Frank Parsons, chairman of the movement, told the manufacturers that they seemed to expect to run a campaign on "hot air" instead of "cold cash." The amount of money spent by British Columbian consumers for goods manufactured and grown in Eastern provinces was never touched upon. None of the broad vision manufacturers in British Columbia are so insular as that. No exception is taken to the importation of such commodities as are not produced in British Columbia or Canada.

But one of the conditions that is seriously challenged is the fact that millions of dollars of British Columbia money are being spent for goods of foreign manufacture and foreign growth that can be and are being manufactured and grown in British Columbia. It was estimated that if the articles of Canadian manufacture were at least given the preference, quality and price being equal, employment could be given in British Columbia to another ten thousand citizens.

Three Reasons for Non-Success

"Why has the campaign not been a greater success?" asked Mr. McKelvie. "There are three reasons. Not enough money provided. Not enough advertising done. Not enough co-operation from the retailers."

He added: "Let you British Columbia manufacturers provide the funds that will permit me to advertise to your customers what you have. And let us give the retailer the support that he has a right to expect. I have had many retailers take the trouble to telephone me and volunteer to give you the use of their windows if I could supply suitable cards. I had none. Why? Because I had not sufficient funds to prepare same. Now, any one of your foreign competitors would not only supply a complete window trim, but would send a man up to dress and decorate the entire window for that grocer."

Retail Trade Is Selling Force

"The retail trade is your sales force. Your sales force, you know, needs to be trained. Needs to have intelligent direction. Needs to have a common objective, and a desire to increase the sale of your goods. If, between your sales force and your office, there existed unexplained friction, and unadjusted differences, your sales would suffer. Gentlemen, there is something wrong with your sales force. Your sales force is a disorganized, disrupted unit. Ninety per cent. of your salesmen think competitively; are trained in an environment of competition. Only a crisis makes them co-operate. You want the public to think in terms of "Made in B.C. Goods" and you don't find the retailer responding. There are a thousand and one little 'pin-pricks' of irritation that are keeping the retailer from being the best possible salesman that he could become for you."

Among the "pin-pricks" Mr. Hougham mentioned "uncertain price." "What enthusiasm," asked Mr. Hougham, "can a grocer have to sell a local baking powder, for instance, that is displayed along one Vancouver street at prices ranging from 19 cents to 30 cents for the same brand, the same sized tin?"

Mr. Hougham stated that he was in favor of price fixing by the manufacturer, checked by an inland trade commission, when necessary. He also mentioned wholesalers selling to consumers directly in competition with the retailers whose support they asked.

Vinegar Prices are Maintained

Vinegar Quotations in 1920 Were Not Increased Like Other Products—Present Prices Will Hold Throughout 1921

AS the vinegar season is now approaching, Canadian Grocer has investigated conditions governing the price of spirit vinegar. Practically all vinegar plants in Eastern Canada purchase their alcohol from one concern, and this concern in turn purchases its raw molasses from the West Indies. In past years, the contracts for molasses were made about August or September of each year for the following year's delivery, and the alcohol prices were then determined and contracts made with vinegar manufacturers. The price of vinegar for the following season was announced about November, the wholesale grocers then taking orders in December and January for the next year's business.

This was followed out in 1919 and as sugar was about seven cents at that time, and the price of molasses was about the same as in former years, consequently vinegar prices for 1920 delivery were not increased like other products. Last year as the sugar market was showing signs of unsteadiness about the time that the contracts for molasses were usually made, the alcohol company held off until late in the fall when conditions were more favorable and therefore saved the vinegar business considerable. Although prices are slightly higher this year than last, it must be remembered that vinegar did not rise like other commodities last year and manufacturers claim that the present prices will hold throughout 1921. Vinegar is manufactured all the year round, and manufacturers provide for storage room for large quantities and consequently are not affected by the trade holding off until prices decline, as there is very little fluctuation in consumption from year to year.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE markets for general grocery commodities are ruling fairly steady although there appears to be considerable price cutting by wholesale houses. Sugar refiners are holding their list price but there is a great deal of irregularity in prices, many houses cutting prices to practically below their cost, undoubtedly in many instances this is being done in order to clear up stocks. The raw sugar market is still in an unsettled condition although during the past week the undertone was somewhat strengthened.

Teas, coffees, walnuts and almonds continue in a strong position under an active demand. Advices from the coast state that there is likely to be higher prices on the new pack of sockeye salmon attributed to the attitude of the fishermen who have recently refused to fish at the price set. These fishermen have been engaged principally to fish sockeye, and if the higher prices are allowed to the fishermen naturally this can be expected to reflect on the finished product.

The situation in the primary markets for prunes and apricots has been considerably strengthened owing to the increased demand for export to Europe. France and Germany have made large purchases of prunes, and England for apricots. This has resulted in holders of fruit developing a waiting attitude and they show no inclination to sell, apparently sitting back awaiting higher prices.

Europe has also become a heavy buyer of Southern rice which has greatly stimulated that market, with the result that prices have advanced ¾ cent per pound during the past week. Spot stocks, however, are unchanged, but with stocks light the tendency is that the higher price in primary markets will be reflected on this market at an early date.

The produce markets have an uncertain tone which is accentuated by the poor outlook for export. Butter, cheese and eggs are all on the downward trend, and it is difficult to state with any degree of definiteness what will materialize in the next few days.

Smoked, barrel and salt meats have shown further declines during the week in keeping with the lower hog market.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 18.—In general the grocery market is quiet this week with a few minor changes, principally due to the absorption of the sales tax in the wholesalers' list price. This is not the general practice with the wholesalers, but in some cases the manufacturers have seen fit to include the tax in the cost of their goods. The most striking feature of the market is the cut in the price of granulated sugar made by some of the local wholesalers. Early this week a reduction of 25c per cwt. was made by one of the wholesalers and the others quickly followed, making the price $10.25. The refiners, however, have not changed their quotations, which stand steady. The quotations on the new crop of Japan tea showed a drop of 25 cents as compared with the price quoted on the new crop last year. Although the primary market for Indian and Ceylon teas shows more strength local conditions have resulted in a decline in nearly all teas handled by local wholesalers. This is an effort to clean up stocks on hand which have been rather stagnant.

Coffee Prices Steady

Montreal.

COFFEE.—There is no change in the quotations on coffee. The market is steady, with a good demand for supplies.

California Fruits Reduced

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS.—A reduction of 10 per cent. on all lines of California canned fruit has been made by some of the local wholesalers in order to clean out supplies. The list given below gives the prices to date. A number of lines are out of stock in a number of cases. Sliced pineapple and Bartlett pears are scarce. There are no changes in canned vegetables. Some reductions have been made on canned salmon and red spring is quoted fifteen cents lower at $3.60. Clover Leaf salmon is also reduced in price and the halves are now selling at $2.80, a reduction of five cents per dozen. One pound tins, tall, are reduced to $5.15 and flats are reduced to $5.30. Other sockeye brands have been reduced to $5.00 per dozen. The reduction in price is the result of competition on the market. Crosse & Blackwell's pickles are advanced 25 cents per dozen on the half pints and are quoted at $4.50. There is an advance of 50 cents on pints, which are quoted at $7.75.

Sugar Prices Cut

Montreal.

SUGAR.—Local wholesalers have again begun cutting sugar prices. One wholesaler led the way by quoting $10.25 on granulated and the others followed. This is now the general price in Montreal, but the refiners' price is unchanged and stands firm at $10.50, although the attitude of the wholesalers to some extent weakens the market.

Slight Advance in Starch

Montreal.

PACKAGE GOODS.—Some of the starch manufacturers are absorbing the sales tax in their cost and consequently an addition of one-eighth cent has been made to the price of starches. Prepared cornstarch is now selling at 10⅛ cents per pound, and laundry starch at 8⅛ cents and celluloid starch, packed forty-five to the case, is advanced to $4.20 per case. Most of the cereal manufacturers are so far showing the sales tax as a separate item and there is therefore no change in quotations made. No definite arrangement has yet been made, however, and wholesalers may later show the tax in their aggregate costs which will result in a slight advance in price. This has not yet been determined and the prices in general are unchanged.

New Japan Teas Lower

Montreal.

TEAS.—The Japan tea market opened this week, with quotations on the new crop 25 cents lower than the opening price of last year. This price, however, is still high for Japan teas, but the result has been an easier feeling on spot stocks with lower prices. The choice grades of Japan tea are offered now at 77 cents per pound. Some lower prices are quoted on Java, Indian and Ceylon teas, although the market does not show any more weakness than has characterized it for some time. Wholesalers have made some adjustments in quotations as a result of the easier feeling that has prevailed, but as far as black teas are concerned there are no new developments. In fact, primary markets show more strength.

Fresh Tomatoes Lower

Montreal.

VEGETABLES.—There is a further advance in the price of new cabbage on account of the demand for supplies. The quotation shows an advance of $1.00 to $5.00 per crate. Cucumbers are also advanced 50 cents per hamper for the same reason and are now quoted at $8.00. New tomatoes, however, are a little easier in price and are quoted 50 cents lower at $7.50 per crate. There is a good demand for fresh vegetables and as the season is early this year local supplies will be, it is expected, on the market at an early date, with resulting lower prices. Potatoes and onions are steady in price. Cauliflower, lettuce, spinach, and parsley are in good supplies, with prices holding.

A CORRECTION

Montreal.—In a previous market report it was stated that Comfort Lye had advanced to $7.25 per case. This is an error, the quotation should read $6.50 per case.

Powdered Milk Lower

Montreal.

MISCELLANEOUS. — Quarter inch cotton rope is reduced two cents a pound and is now quoted at 35 cents. Squirrel brand peanut butter is reduced two and a quarter cents a pound in bulk and is now selling at 21 cents. Powdered milk is also reduced in price. Cases of 24 one-pound tins are now selling at $9.15, a reduction of $1.25. Some of the soap manufacturers have chosen to add the sales tax to the list price of their goods, with the result that some brands are advanced ten cents a case, and others are up twenty cents a case.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 18.—One brand of powdered milk is reduced, also peanut butter, castile soap, soda and sweet biscuits. Starches are slightly higher. Dealers in honey have reduced quotations and as there still appears to be good supplies throughout the country, with a very small demand, quotations at country points are also down. The primary markets for southern grown rices have developed a firmer tone and prices are higher at the coast under stimulus of export business to Europe. Prunes and apricots are firmer at the coast. New pack California asparagus is offered at slightly higher prices. There appears to be a firmer undertone on jams and some wholesalers are bringing their prices more in line with manufacturers' list. Almonds and walnuts continue to hold a strong position. Teas and coffees are firmly held. The sugar market has an uncertain tone in view of the unsettled and weak condition of the raw sugar market.

New Asparagus Higher

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—Brokers announce that the new pack of California asparagus is quoted at an advance of 10 to 15 cents per case higher than last season. Recent advices from the coast state that fishermen have gone on strike for higher prices and as these fishermen have been hired principally to fish sockeye salmon, it would indicate that if the fishermen receive the higher rate, a higher price can be expected on sockeye salmon. Stocks of sockeye at the coast are practically cleaned up and as spot stocks are also light, a firm position can be expected. There is slightly firmer undertone on jams, some wholesalers being inclined to advance prices more in line with manufacturers' list. Jams, however, can still be bought at prices around 80 cents for fours and $3 to $3.50 per dozen for 16 ounce jars.

Prunes Are Stronger

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS.—The primary markets for prunes and apricots continue in a strong position. This is stimulated to a great extent by the demand for export to Europe. France and Germany have become big buyers of prunes and England for apricots. It is reported that New York brokers have developed a waiting attitude and are holding back their stocks in anticipation for higher prices. There has been a good demand for prunes locally, but mostly in small quantities. Raisins are holding firm at unchanged quotations. Several shipments of raisins have been re-shipped to the United States, mainly on account of the fact that the price is lower here, when the difference in exchange is taken into account.

Sugar Unsettled

Toronto.

SUGAR.—There is a tone of uncertainty in sugars due to the weak condition of the raw sugar market. Quotations, too, are very irregular, ranging from $10.35 to $10.75 and in fact we did hear of one lot moving at $10.15, but this could not be confirmed. The demand is limited and there is no effort made to stock up as was the case a year ago.

Teas Continue Firm

Toronto.

TEAS.—Speaking generally, buying of teas is still confined to small lots for immediate requirements and there does not appear to be much effort made to carry a surplus either by wholesalers or retailers. It was intimated some weeks ago in Canadian Grocer there was likely to be an increased duty placed on tea. This, however, did not materialize to the amount expected and the duty is only increased by the sales tax. This sales tax increases the cost four per cent. and those merchants who were fortunate enough to buy ahead of their requirements are the better off thereby. Some package tea packers are absorbing the 2½ per cent. import tax and are only pasing on to the retailer 1½ per cent. The market situation remains in the same firm position that has characterized this market for some time.

Cucumbers Scarce and High

Toronto.

VEGETABLES. — Cucumbers are scarce and prices are considerably advanced, from $8.50 to $10 per hamper is quoted this week as compared with $6 a couple of weeks ago. The cool weather of the past few days has somewhat curtailed the deliveries of Canadian asparagus and the market has stiffened. A few days of warm weather, however, will increase the production and prices will probably tend lower. The first car of Carolina new potatoes is expected to arrive this week end and are quoted at $7.50 per barrel. Tomatoes are arriving in heavy shipments and are offered at $6.50 to $6.75 per crate of six baskets for Floridas and Mexicans are selling at $6 per lug containing about 30 pounds. Canadian potatoes are slow at unchanged prices.

NUTS.—Shelled walnuts continue in a strong position with quotations on spot ranging around 69 cents per pound. Stocks in France are practically exhausted with no possible chance of any improvement until the new crop is harvested. Indications are that prices will reach a higher level as the local market is almost bare. Shelled almonds are also in a strong position and although quotations are unchanged a tendency for an advance. Shelled pecans continue firm at high figures. Shelled brazils are offered at lower figures for future delivery. Spanish shelled [illegible]

YESTERDAYS ARE PASSED

By Frank E. Mutton

The problems of to-day are plans of to-day.

Re-adjusted minds must of necessity precede a re-constructed commerce.

We must stop depending on the past and begin to penetrate the present, in order to anticipate and participate in the future.

Trying to solve present problems with past plans is about as effectual as attempting to compete with electricity with the tallow candle—it spells failure.

Many of our to-days are failures because we are using yesterday's methods.

We all recall the rapid advance of the bicycle. But it was that situation that paved the way for the automobile. The people demanded an improved bicycle, and they got it.

Man has learned to travel on land, on water, and finally in the air, and it will not be a great while until travel will be spoken of not as navigation, or transportation, but as aviation, for it will be a better method.

Times were when the pulpit and the press did all the moulding of public opinion.

The pulpit is not nearly as effectual as it has been because it has not improved its methods.

The press is much more effectual than it ever has been because it has greatly improved its methods. But greater by far than both pulpit and press in the moulding of public opinion is the moving picture because it is a better method of education. It depends entirely on the eye. It shows up all the facts. As a consequence, our great dramatic stars of the past have been forced to learn how to face the camera instead of facing the audience. They have had to change their methods.

In former days of the stage, a resonant, ringing voice and good acoustics carried the big message of the drama to the ears of the people, but means of this kind have showed decline. To-day it is the lens, the camera and the screen that are carrying that great message to the eyes of the multitudes. The theatre has changed its methods.

What are we all doing in the way of changing our methods.

It will not do to watch for business to come back. We must run after it, grab hold of it, turn it around and force it back—with better methods.

It seems to the writer that the trouble with this country is that a great many people are sitting around waiting for prosperity to start. They have not made the proper effort for changing stale methods, nor to secure new tools. As I see it, prosperity has not got any self-starter. You have got to do the starting.

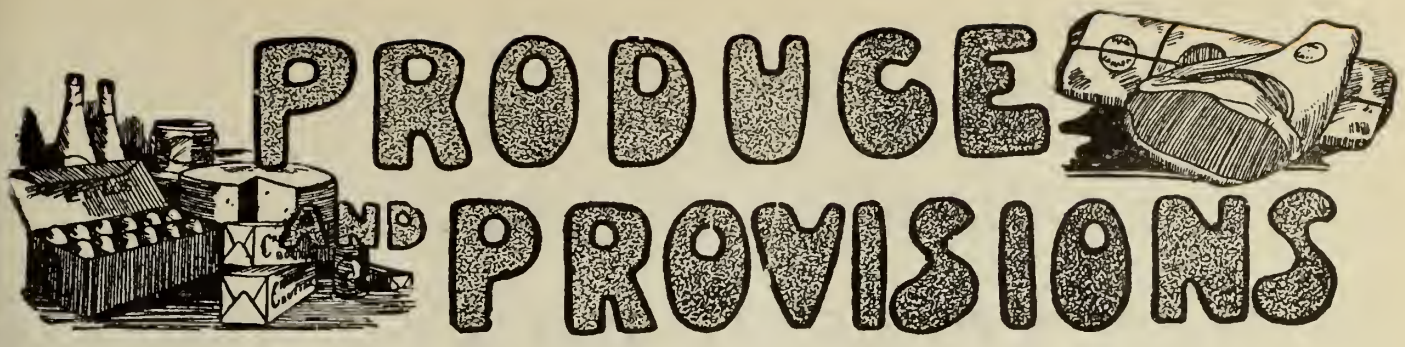
NEW PRODUCE CO.

London, Ont., May 17.—The announcement made in a previous issue of Canadian Grocer that a company of Detroit and Windsor capitalists was being formed to take over the plant of the Canadian Packing Co. at London Junction is followed this week by word that a charter for $1,000,000 has been granted. The firm will be known as the Producers' Terminal Co. and manufacturing operations are to commence next week. At a meeting of the directors the following officers were chosen: President and general manager, Wm. S. Haman; vice-president, Alfred Ironside; secretary-treasurer, Clayton Ironside; directors, Harry M. Todd and Wm. J. Howlett. The firm will employ 100 hands.

OTTAWA GROCERS WILL OPERATE THEIR OWN BAKERY

Ottawa, May 16.—Ottawa retail grocers will soon own and operate their own bakery if plans now being arranged come along as desired. A company will be incorporated with a capital of $50,000 and as practically the whole of this amount is now in sight, the venture appears likely to get away to a good start. A location on Breeze Hill Avenue has been practically decided on and an option secured.

W. Gardiner's general store in Bolton, Ont., was among the business places destroyed in a fire that visited the village a short time ago, when damage to the extent of $35,000 was done.



Butter and Eggs Now at Low Levels

Early Spring This Year is Responsible for a Big Production of Both These Commodities—Creamery Butter is Lower Now Than the Lowest Point Reached in the Same Period During the Last Four Years

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL, May 16.—The effects of the early spring this year have been perhaps more noticeably felt in the produce market, as far as the grocer is concerned. It was first noticed in the egg market when early in the spring the production showed a big increase with consequent lower prices. In the accompanying diagram it will be seen that prices on all lines of produce except cheese are now at a lower level than they have reached in the last four years. It shows the months of April, May and June since 1918, and prices are given weekly as quoted in Canadian Grocer. Each square represents a week.

Some Interesting Facts

At the end of the first week in May of this year, creamery butter reached a point four cents lower than the lowest point reached in these corresponding months of the last four years. In the second week in May, 1918, it went as low as 45 cents a pound and stayed at that price through the month of June. This fact is even more interesting, when it is noted that at that time the grass butter was not on the market and still with the price quoted for 1921, the new make of butter is on the market and the price quoted is for that quality. This fact is even more striking in the case of eggs. In May, 1918, fresh eggs went as low as 41 cents, but already this year the price has been down to 36 cents, and although it is now up two cents it is still lower than at any time during the spring months of the last four years. The same may be said of live hogs.

Good Prospects in Produce

When a Canadian Grocer representative showed this record of produce prices to the manager of one of the Montreal produce firms, he said, "It is very interesting to see this comparison of prices, but one is apt to be led astray if they base any conclusions for future prices on records of past years. The prices are largely governed by the law of supply and demand. One is apt to say that since the chart shows that produce prices have, during the month of June in the last four years held fairly steady that they are likely to do so this year. It might be the case, but it is no safe rule. This year we have splendid prospects for an active produce market. Prices are much lower, the demand is good and the supply is even better. With the lower prices people will use more butter and eggs and the same may be said of meats.

Early Spring Responsible

"The early spring this year is almost entirely responsible for the fall in prices. It led to a bigger supply, a supply that exceeded the demand even when the demand increased. Last year the crops were fairly good, prices on feed were low and the farmers, rather than taking the low figures for their feed kept it and fed their cattle and their poultry better through the winter than they have been fed for some winters. The result was that when the early spring came and they were put out to feed they were not handicapped by being in poor condition. The cows responded quickly to the fresh feed, the yield of milk quickly increased and the hens being better fed laid more eggs. These conditions are general and the response from the country has been remarkable.

Pastures in Good Condition

"In the past week I have been down through the eastern provinces. There I found the pastures to be in excellent condition, the grass is fresh and the cattle are prospering on the early pasturage. This is quite a new thing, for in other years the pastures have not been ready so early.

The above chart shows the prices of fresh creamery butter in prints, fresh eggs, cheese and live hogs for the months of April, May and June in 1918, 1919 and 1920 in comparison with the prices of April and May of this year. It will be noticed by the graphical comparison that prices on all but cheese are lower now than they have been in the spring months of the last four years.

An Active Market

"The merchants are not sorry to see the prices dropping the way they are when there is the good cause for it that we have this year. With it comes an increased consumption, a bigger turnover and a more active market. I do feel that even yet the bottom has not been reached in some lines of produce. Butter took a very sudden drop and in less than two weeks declined over eighteen cents a pound. It has been a market on which a merchant might make quite a loss unless he was watching conditions closely. Still the decline cannot but help business and with a good steady production, which I feel sure we will have, prices should keep to the low level. There is everything to indicate that this year Canada will have a record production of dairy and produce lines."

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 18.—The feature of the produce market this week is the general weak condition that prevails, and a list of record low prices. Prices on butter, cheese, eggs and lard are now lower than they have been in three years. Butter further declined with increased supplies coming to hand. The apparent consumption of butter has increased with the lower prices. Eggs are also lower. The production is still very good and ample supplies to meet the demand are on the market. There is no improvement in the export demand, buyers are evidently still looking for lower prices. The cheese market shows further weakness with bigger offerings, and while the demand locally is good, the call for export is poor on account of the condition of the market. Cheese prices, in a wholesale way, are lower, but quotations to the retailer are unchanged although lower prices are expected. Quotations on live hogs are lower. Dressed hogs have also declined but fresh cuts are unchanged in price. There is a good demand for cooked and smoked meats with prices ruling steady. The only change in the fish market is a drop of one cent in the price of haddock with an improved supply.

Cheese Market Weak

Montreal.

CHEESE.—The cheese market shows further weakness due principally to the increased receipts in comparison with the previous week and with the corresponding week of last year. The absence of outside demand for supplies is also responsible for the easy tone to the market but at the same time there is a good demand for the local trade as a result of the lower prices. Local quotations are unchanged this week.

Further Drop on Butter

Montreal.

BUTTER.—Butter prices show a further decline amounting to one cent per pound on creamery prints. The receipts of butter continue to improve and prices have a downward trend. Solids are selling at 29 cents per pound. At the lower level of values there is a good local demand for supplies which indicates an increase in the consumption and it is interesting to note that the price of butter is now lower than it has been for several years. This has resulted in a marked falling off in the sales of margarine and other substitutes. There is every indication that the price of butter will be easy for some time. With the declining market the demand for export is not large and stocks on hand are rapidly increasing.

EGGS.—Reports from the country show that the production of eggs is still good and receipts in the city for last week show an increase over those of the previous week. Prices on select are 2 cents per dozen lower than prices quoted a week ago and No. 1's are selling at 30 cents per dozen. There is an active trade in eggs with a good demand and a large consumption on account of the low prices. Selects are now selling at 33 cents per dozen.

Lard Prices Drop

Montreal.

LARD.—There has been no improvement in the condition of the market for lard, the demand being limited and the feeling easy, with sales of Canadian refined grades at from 17 to 18 cents per pound in bricks, and 20 pound pails selling at 14½ cents. It is interesting to note that the price quoted on lard one year ago was 31 cents per pound in bricks.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 18.—There appears to be a lack of confidence in the produce markets and with the outlook for export very uncertain, dealers are not showing any inclination to buy for storage purposes to any great extent. Butter is again reduced. Cheese showed a drastic cut but the opinion is expressed that a further cut will be necessary to bring prices more in line with the butter market. Eggs continue to move downward in a weak market. Lard is lower but shortening is unchanged. Margarine is also lower with tendencies for further recessions. Cooked hams, smoked bacon, smoked hams, salt and barrel meats all show reductions. Live and dressed hogs are lower, but beef, calves and lambs are fairly steady at unchanged quotations.

Butter Again Drops

Toronto.

BUTTER—Prices on butter were again lowered during the week. There appears to be some irregularity in prices, some produce houses quoting 32 cents on the top quality, others 31 cents, while still others quote 30 cents. Second grades are bringing around 28 cents. There is some uncertainty as to the condition of the market, some claiming that the situation is somewhat steadier, but others are of the opinion that the market continues very much upset, with tendencies for further declines. In view of export conditions, the latter appears to be the more correct view. Conditions and prices in the United Kingdom are such as show little encouragement for export and with the production steadily increasing there is more likely to be a downward movement than an upward.

Boiled Hams Easier

Toronto.

COOKED MEATS.—Some packers are quoting easier prices on cooked hams, but there are others who maintain their last quotations. Ordinary boiled ham ranges from 50 to 52 cents per pound and squared trimmed 53 cents. Boiled shoulders are down one cent, bringing the price to 44 cents per pound. Cheese Prices Decline

Toronto.

CHEESE.—Quotations on cheese made a drastic decline during the week, bringing the price down to 18 cents per pound. The Toronto Produce Exchange were offering at 15¼ cents but no one appeared to show any inclination to buy heavily. It is thought that prices will probably drop a little lower to bring them more in line with the butter market. There is still some old cheese offered, which is holding at around 32 cents per pound. No new Stilton has been offered as yet but old is offered at 32 cents, which is one to two cents lower than last week.

Eggs Moving Downward

Toronto.

EGGS.—A steady movement in the downward direction is noted in the market for eggs. Produce dealers are quoting to the trade 28 to 30 cents per dozen but are offering at country points 22 to 24 cents, in fact one house stated that they were bidding only 21 cents, but at time of going to press they had not purchased any at that price, but it is difficult to say what will materialize in the course of a few days.

FRESH MEATS.—The hog market continued weak during the week and prices on live hogs dropped 50 cents per hundred. Dressed hogs were also reduced $1 per hundred, bringing lightweight down to $15 to $17 and heavy $13 to $15. Beef, calves and lambs are fairly steady at unchanged prices.

Margarine Down One Cent

Toronto.

MARGARINE.—Quotations are reduced one to two cents per pound, bringing the price to 25 and 26 cents. In view of the low price on butter, the demand for margarine has considerably fallen off and it is felt that prices will have to reach a lower basis before the movement can be expected to show any improvement.

Toronto.

PROVISIONS. — Smoked hams and bacon are reduced one cent per pound on practicaly all cuts. There is a tendency on the part of some packers to maintain fairly high prices on hams, claiming they are doing this to curtail the demand in order to build up a reserve stock for the purpose of turning into cooked hams to meet the heavy demand which will materialize during the summer season. Dry salt meats are easier also pickled rolls in barrels are reduced.

WINNIPEG MARKETS

WINNIPEG, May 18.—The feature of the produce and provision market is the reduction in butter. The market continues weak and further declines are expected. Cheese is in an easy position with tendencies for lower prices. Eggs are also weak and lower quotations are expected. Live hogs are showing a firmer tone. Smoked hams and bacon are unchanged. Cooked meats are in better demand with unchanged quotations. Fresh lake trout is arriving. Crabs and lobsters are in good demand.

Butter Drops Ten Cents

Winnipeg.

BUTTER.—A drop of 10 cents per pound on butter is recorded since our last report. The butter market has been in a weak position for some time, but no such decline as this was expected. Lower prices were looked for, but it was generally conceded that the decline would come gradually. The market continues weak and further declines are likely. Fresh made creamery is quoted at 35 cents per pound. Large shipments are arriving with a good demand.

EGGS.—Owing to the continued heavy production of eggs the market has weakened and there has been a decline of 2 cents per dozen. The tone to the market is weak and buyers are expecting lower prices. New laid candled eggs are quoted at 26 cents per dozen.

Hog Market Firmer

Winnipeg.

FRESH MEATS.—Due to the limited offerings the hog market has shown a firmer tone and selects are quoted at $13 per hundredweight. Trading on the cattle market has been quiet and the few good quality killing cattle especially steers were offered from $7.50 to $8.50. Due to lack of receipts trading on sheep and lambs has been very quiet. Some lines of fresh pork cuts have shown a slight advance.

Must the Printing Industry Follow the Building Trades to Stagnation?

An unheard of condition exists in the building trades in Canada.

Everywhere there is a crying need for homes, but practically none are being built. Why?

Because the cost is considered prohibitive. Labor and materials are so high that the man who contemplates building a home for himself counts the cost, and decides that he cannot afford it.

The result, of course, is increased demand for houses to rent—and higher rents—and no one knows the end.

We don't want this stagnation to occur in the printing industry, but employers are right now faced with a demand from the International Typographical Union that the 44-hour week shall be the basis for all wage scales, and the Toronto Unions are demanding a wage of $44 per week. This will add 36 per cent. to the wage bill of Toronto job printers and publishers, other than those of daily papers.

Does anyone feel that under present economic conditions an increase from 73c per hour to $1.00 per hour for printers is justified?

Does anyone believe that the effect of such an increase in the labor cost of printed matter, can be other than harmful to the industry as a whole?

Printers can only find employment as long as users of their product continue to buy.

Will there not come a time, when—if costs keep on mounting—printers will find themselves in the same position as many highly skilled carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers, and painters are now in? They are willing and anxious to work but cannot find a market for their services.

This is a matter in which the buyers of printing—the subscribers to this and other papers—and the advertisers—are vitally concerned. An increase of 36% in the wage bill of publishers would necessarily involve an increase in subscription price and advertising rates.

That is plain.

Publishers would be very reluctant to add one cent to the present subscription price of their papers or to effect any increase in advertising rates, but they cannot possibly absorb any such addition in wage costs as is proposed, and stay in business.

An expression of the opinion of readers of this paper on the Union's proposals, involving an increase of 36% in the labor cost of printed matter, is asked. Will you not write a letter to the editor (not for publication) telling him your view of the situation?

Don't let us drive the printing industry into the condition of the building trades.

This statement is published by and has received the endorsation of the Toronto publishers who are members of the

NUGGET BROOMS

Bear Close Inspection

Do you know why the dealer finds Nugget Brooms so profitable? Because the woman who once buys a Nugget Broom will never use another Brand. Every Nugget Broom the dealer sells helps him to build up a permanent Broom business.

Invite your customer to pull the broom stock apart until she finds the very heart of a Nugget Broom. The corn here is just as clean, as free from seeds, as carefully trimmed, as on the outside. This hand-selected corn gives a Nugget Broom many more weeks of service than the ordinary broom.

There are eight Keystone Brands. Brooms of each brand are guaranteed uniform in quality.

Familiarizing the Trade With Your Trade-Mark, Brand or Name

The whole value of a trade-mark, brand or name lies in its renown.

The surest, quickest and least expensive way to make your trade-mark, brand or name well known to the whole Canadian grocery trade is by identifying them each week through continuous advertising in Canadian Grocer—Canada's only weekly grocery trade newspaper—the source to which they look for every business message to the grocery trade of the Dominion.

NEW CROP VALENCIA RAISINS MAY BE LOWER

Juan B. Domensch, fruit exporter of Denia, Spain, writes that weather conditions for the Valencia raisin crop have been unfavorable despite plentiful rains. Expectations are that the crop will be 10,000 to 12,000 tons unless something unforeseen happens. Prices are expected to be lower owing to exchange, but the farmers will continue to receive the same amount in pesetas.

RICE MARKET ADVANCING

Recent advices from the coast on the rice situation say:

"The southern rice market has been advancing steadily during the past two weeks. This is beginning to have its effect on the New York market. Our mills report that those farmers who have been weak holders of rough rice are now sold out. Export orders too are being placed for nearly all grades. This rice is being shipped from Gulf ports to Europe and South America on exceedingly low freight rates, the rates running as low as 25c per hundred pounds to French and German ports. Indications are that the market will continue firm with probably further advances."

A LESSON FROM THE CONTEST

The Dayton Scales word contest proves that Canadian retail merchants and their clerks are systematic.

A glance at the lists of words sent in shows that the great majority did not tackle their problem in haphazard fashion—but built up their lists to surprising totals by well-ordered, systematic research.

The lesson is:

The systematic merchant and the systematic clerk should insist on store equipment which will promote system in doing business.

The store equipped with Dayton Scales is the store which employs SYSTEM to save time and money for both buyer and seller.

The "Pink" is the Smallest Salmon

A great Poet once wrote:

"Ask why God made the gem so small,
And why so large the granite?
Because he meant mankind should set
The higher value on it."

The "Pink" is the Gem of the Pacific Coast and the most valuable of foods.

Try it like this:

SALMON A LA CRÉOLE

Cook in two heaping tablespoonfuls of butter one finely chopped green pepper, one minced onion, and one chopped tomato (or one-half cup of canned tomatoes), add one cup of milk; stir until the pepper and onion are soft; add one can of Pink Cascade Salmon, drained and minced; simmer; serve hot.

The rich flavour of "Cascade" Salmon is well known. Show your thrifty Lady Customers the above delightful mode of serving it.

"Canada Holds the Key"

Agnes C. Laut, in the May 15th issue of MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE, uses figures and facts that prove the future heart-beats of the great oil-burning leviathans of the ocean lanes will depend on the lakes of fuel that will be sucked up from the "basement" of Northwestern Canada. In an article, "Strangling Our Oil Goose," Miss Laut emphasizes:

"Canada has the oil. Canada holds the naval and merchant marine key of America. Edmonton in your generation and in mine will be a second Pittsburg. Great tankers will float out from Prince Rupert to supply the Orient. Tank cars will become as common across our prairies as grain cars. Our National Railways will—"

But you will have to read this talented author's article to get the picture she visualizes of the future of Western Canada when the development of oil resources of the North is at its zenith.

There is a strong hint in this article of Miss Laut's that Canada may "strangle her oil goose" by too much so-called caution. Read MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE, May 15th, and discover how Miss Laut argues that Canada will spoil her chances for control of the oil situation in North America and great wealth—if she is not careful.

"Neighbor's Wooing"
By Francis Dickie

"The Legion of the Lost"
By J. L. Rutledge

Why do men disappear? Sometimes it's premeditated action on the part of the individual, committed for the same reason as suicide. At other times it's accident—and then again, there are grim disappearances that are never solved. In real life the long arm of coincidence often plays a role that baffles the detectives.

"Our Lower Prices Bogey"

Who's to be blamed for the falling off in demand for certain necessities? What caused the slump in wages in many lines of industry? Read this article in which is described the "Deadly Circle" to blame for the passing depression. The article includes a resumé of the situation from leading employers and labor leaders.

"Son of the Clackmannan Giant"

The surest, quickest and least expensive way to make your trade-mark, brand or name well known to the whole Canadian grocery trade is by identifying them each week through continuous advertising in Canadian Grocer—Canada's only weekly grocery trade newspaper—the source to which they look for every business message to the grocery trade of the Dominion.

New Slant on an Old Problem

If a tea pedlar came to your house, you know what your wife would say to him. Now, wouldn't you like all your customers to say the same thing? What a lot more tea business it would bring back to you!

This is possible if you will go after the trade in a different way. You can't do it, can you, if you and the pedlar are pushing the same kind of tea—bulk tea?

Your opportunity lies in selling RED ROSE package TEA; RED ROSE is not peddled from door to door.

The tea pedlar cuts a wide swath in your business, wider than you think. You can turn around and get back the business that rightfully belongs to you if you will sell RED ROSE TEA. And nobody knows this better than the pedlar.

Push it as you have pushed bulk tea.

If this is your case!

If we are right!

Why not begin now?

"Include Sales Tax in the List Price"

Comment Among Retail Grocers is Almost Unanimous in Asking That Sales Tax Be Included in List Price—Allows the Retailer to Forget That There Is a Tax—New Ruling However Makes Compulsory Showing of 1½ Per Cent. Tax on an Invoice.

By Staff Correspondent of Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL, May 23.—The chief comment made by the retail grocers here on the budget question is their almost unanimous request that the sales tax or taxes be added either by the manufacturer or wholesaler to the cost, thus making a list price which includes the tax and allows the retailer to forget that there is a tax. It may be readily seen that the retail grocer's invoice showing a 1½ per cent. tax on the total becomes a mathematical puzzle when he begins to figure out his cost and consequent selling price.

A Problem To Be Avoided

The manager of Almy's grocery department in Montreal in expressing his opinion on this question to Canadian Grocer representative said, "By all means I want to see the sales tax added to the cost of each line and made part of the list price by either the wholesaler or manufacturer or both. I think that it would be very easy for either of these distributors to make that arrangement. To me there seems to be many advantages for such a system and the other system seems to be full of unnecessary trouble and worry with many possibilities of mistakes and an incentive to broadcast price-cutting. It seems that it would be a very simple matter for the distributors to simply make a new list price, including the tax, and let the retailer forget that there is a tax. When the list price is simply the actual cost, and the tax is added at the bottom of the invoice, it is only natural to think that a number of grocers will neglect to add in the tax when it seems so small on each article or else he will find it such a complicated task to figure out the aggregate cost of each line, that he will make a guess at it, with the result that there will be an unfair variety of prices asked by the retailers. The competition will commence that nearly always ends in someone going to the wall.

Taxation Satisfactory

"As far as the taxation goes, it seems quite satisfactory. There are a number of lines that have been exempt that are now taxable and it will take a little time to get things adjusted. So far we have made no changes in prices. We will not advance any of our prices until we have actually paid the tax. Some merchants are taking advantage of the public in this regard already, by adding a little which is simply extra profit. When we have paid the tax then we will charge it to our customers. There is only one line, as far as the grocery business is concerned, that will be seriously affected by the taxation.

Hits Flavoring Extracts Hard

"Flavoring extracts will be forced up in price by the added taxation on alcohol. All pure extracts contain a high percentage of alcohol. The result is that the best extracts will be high in price and their sale will be noticeably decreased. However, I hear that an amendment is being asked for by the manufacturers. Personally I believe that there will be a number of adjustments. As yet I have seen nothing of the workings of the new tax. As I have not yet had to buy any of the new taxable lines, I have made no changes in my prices but it is not my intention to absorb the tax, for in so doing I am taking that much money out of the earnings of our company."

Asks for Inclusive Price List

A. C. Cavanagh, sales manager of Goodwin's grocery department, Montreal, expressed the same opinion with regard to the system of collecting the sales tax. He claims that in the interests of the grocery business as a whole the retail grocers should band themselves together in an effort to get the wholesalers or the manufacturers to quote a list price which will include the sales tax. His reasons for this stand were practically the same as those pointed out by the manager of Almy's grocery department.

Hard for Smaller Grocers

"It will be particularly hard for the smaller grocers if the tax is collected on the total invoice. The bigger groceries have a staff that can handle these details and quote to the store manager the net cost of any particular purchase. But just imagine a grocer getting an invoice like this from his wholesaler:

1 box breakfast food.....	$5.00
1 doz. cans of corn.....	1.50
½ doz. bottles of olives..	1.14
1 box of soap	4.25
Total.....	$11.89
Sales tax, 1½ per cent...	.18
	$12.07

MUST PUT 1½ P.C. TAX ON INVOICE SEPARATELY NOW

Ottawa, May 23 (Special) — An amendment has been made in the budget as recently announced, and is much in line with the wishes of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association. Sir Henry Drayton has made the amendment providing that the purchaser shall be furnished with a written invoice of any sale, stating separately the amount of the tax to at least the extent of 1½ per cent., and such tax must not be included in the manufacturers,' producers' or wholesalers' costs on which the profit is calculated.

The Finance Minister asked why the full amount of the tax should not be shown.

Sir Henry pointed out that the change now proposed would mean a return to the system in vogue last year. A wholesaler when making a sale showed 1½ per cent. only. If a manufacturer made a sale direct to retailer, and if he had to show the full tax, he would have to show twice the tax shown by the wholesaler. The manufacturer, he stated, desired the opportunity of showing the same tax as the wholesaler, and that is given to him by this amendment.

"Now from that bill he wants to find out what the olives actually cost him per bottle and at what price he can sell them to make a fair profit. He is faced with a complex mathematical problem on every item. How much easier it would be for the distributor to put a new list price on the goods which includes the tax. There would be no puzzle then and the grocer would know immediately what each line cost him. There are always many grocers who rather than figure the whole thing out will neglect the 1½ per cent. because it looks small, but he is forgetting that in a year he is actually losing almost 1½ per cent. on his net turnover, by no means a small loss."

Made Possible by Government

W. Finlay, proprietor of E. J. Quinn's grocery, St. Catherine Street, Westmount, in expressing his approval of the proposal made by some of his fellow grocers said, "Now that the Government has made it legal for the manufacturers and wholesalers to absorb the sales tax in their list price, it would be of great advantage to the grocer if such a system were universally adopted. A man is apt to forget to add in the 1½ per cent. to the cost of his goods and as a result he is out that much. Then, too, if he does remember he has a task before him to figure it out on all the lines he carries. It does very little good to talk about the taxation. We have to pay it and the less we are reminded about it the better. It would all soon be forgotten if the tax were included in the list price and still the Government would be gaining its revenue. I do not think that it would lead to price cutting on the part of the distributors because they as a rule stand firm to their list price. A number of manufacturers have already adopted the system but if it is not universal it would be worse than ever because a man is apt to forget just which prices include the tax and which do not. It would greatly help the retail grocer if the suggestion was generally adopted and I believe that such a thing can be had if the grocers will make known their desire."

Retail Grocers Unanimous

The retail grocers in Montreal seem to be unanimous on this question and it is interesting to note that their request is directly opposite to the request made last week by the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild. Every grocer approached by Canadian Grocer representative expressed himself strongly in favor of having a list price quoted by the distributors which will include the tax.

Think Tax Should Have Been Collected From Manufacturers

Winnipeg, May 23.—W. E. O. Jones, of the Western Grocers, Ltd., in regard to the budget states that the sales tax is being accepted very gracefully by the trade as it is thought this system is a good way to raise the necessary revenue.

Wholesalers, however, think that the full tax should be collected from the manufacturers as it would save a lot of extra work on the part of the wholesalers, but nevertheless they are perfectly in sympathy with the act as it is.

Is No Hardship

D. S. Manson, of the Scott Fruit Co., Winnipeg, in regard to the duty on grapefruit remarked that as there has to be a revenue, and as there is no tax on oranges, lemons and bananas it is no hardship to place this duty on grapefruit. This new duty on California and Florida grapefruit amounts to about 75 cents per case extra with about 60 cents per case on British West Indies grapefruit.

"Better to Have Placed Tax on all Flour"

A More Advisable Policy Would Have Been to Levy a Tax on All Flour, Regardless of Package and Only at Source of Manufacture, Says General Manager of a Large Milling Concern — Other Opinions on the Question

OATMEAL, ROLLED OATS AND CORNMEAL ARE NOW EXEMPT

Ottawa, May 23 (Special) — In the amendments to the new taxation laws as now proposed by Sir Henry Drayton is one which now includes oatmeal, rolled oats and cornmeal in the exemptions, irrespective of the size of the package in which they are sold. The initial announcement included these in the list of taxable foodstuffs.

"UNDER the new sales tax basis," remarked A. C. McLeod, general manager of the Canadian Cereal and Flour Mills Co., Ltd., Stratford, Ont.; to Canadian Grocer, "we naturally figure that the law will affect our business to the detriment of the smaller sized packages, in that the retailer will most likely ask for delivery of his flour in larger quantities. In fact just to-day we had a request for shipment to one of our dealers of a certain quantity of flour in 98-pound bags, stating that it was his intention to put it up in the smaller size packages as required. To protect our trade we naturally would prefer supplying him with the 24-pound and smaller sized bags. His advice was that if we did, he expected we would reimburse him for the full value of the 98-pound bags when returned empty.

"We feel that it is necessary for the Government to levy a tax, but we feel in connection with flour it would have been much more advisable to have placed a tax on all flour regardless of size of package on the basis of say two per cent. or less, and to overcome the complication this tax to be assessed by manufacturers and eliminating both wholesalers and jobbers.

How It Affects Retailing Mills

"It is most difficult to get accurate information as to the basis of tax on our different products. For instance, a mill that is retailing is naturally compelled to assess the three per cent. on all flour or meal under 48 pounds, while a dealer may buy in a larger quantity and distribute in the smaller packages if he puts it up himself, without this tax. We have been advised through the Canadian National Millers' Association that on carload business we are supposed to charge the three per cent. on all shipments including freight to destination, while less than carload lots they claim there is no necessity for mills to deviate from the present practice of selling on the f.o.b. point to shipment basis. They also advise that there will be no allowance for bad debts, and there will be adjustments made in the case of bags returned, the basis however, being not yet definitely decided. It is stated that it will likely be on a yearly adjustment basis.

"With regard to the word flour, it is advised that this means wheat flour, corn flour, buckwheat flour, rye flour, gluten flour, sago and tapioca flour, potato and barley flour."

Will Not Be a Detriment

"We do not think that the tax on flour will be a detriment to trade-marked packages," was the opinion expressed by B. H. Meyers, of the Peterborough Cereal Co., at Peterborough, Ont. "Hitherto we have not been taxable on any articles. The tax chargeable on the small packages of flour really only concerns the retail store, and we do not think the small amount of tax that would be added to the price of the flour would make any material difference.

"For instance, a bag of flour is worth about $5. A 24-pound sack of flour would therefore be worth about $1.25. The tax on this would come to less than 5 cents, so that the retailer could figure for making his sales that a 24-pound bag of flour would cost him $1.30 in place of $1.25. As the consumer should not be aware of the amount of the sales tax, he would have no occasion to request the flour to be sold to him in bulk. Therefore, in my opinion, I do not think the sales tax should have any effect on the selling of flour in trade-marked packages."

A Very Unfair Measure

"We believe that exempting flour and oatmeal only when sold in packages over 48 pounds is a decided barrier in the way of trade-marked package goods, and we think it a very unfair measure," stated W. Brodie, of Brodie and Harvie, Ltd., Montreal. "It seems almost impossible that the luxury tax should be abolished on jewelry, etc., and a tax applied to the staff of life. It would appear that the purchaser of small quantities of these goods must buy in bulk, which is not always desirable, or purchase goods in packages, and pay more for them as the dealer will, of course, have to pass the extra on to the consumer."

A Merchant's Opinion

"I think the sales tax on packages of flour and cereals under 48 pounds will have a tendency to kill the trade in these lines of goods," remarked W. J. McCully, wholesaler and retailer in groceries at Stratford, Ont. "It is also working hardships on the small householders who buy flour in small quantities. Our trade is about 70 per cent. in packages under 48 pounds. I cannot see why they specified the tax for the small buyer. I hear that merchants are buying flour in large quantities, and re-filling in bags. In this way I think it would be a hardship on the miller who has tried hard to establish his brands of flour.

$6.91 on These Lines

"The other day our sales tax on cooked meats, flour and fruits amounted to $6.91. In this way no doubt they will be able to raise a considerable amount. But I do not believe that we can add this to our goods and get our money out of it. However, generally speaking I think the retail trade ought to be pretty well satisfied. If general conditions in business and labor would settle down to the basis of doing business, we would not find the tax we have to pay such a burden."

Commence Buying When Prices Stiffen

Ontario Branch C.M.A. Ask Labor to Contribute to Workmen's Compensation — Total Amount Awarded for Compensation Last Year Was $7,780,145.25

AT the annual meeting of the Ontario Branch Canadian Manufacturers Association, held in Hamilton, Ont., a demand was made that Labor be made to contribute a share to the liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act. As evidence that compensation for accidents is becoming a heavy tax on industry in Ontario John R. Shaw, Woodstock, retiring chairman, stated that the total amount awarded for compensation during 1920 was $7,780,145.25 as against a total of $4,192,859.93 during 1919. The increase was said to be due largely to the increased benefits provided for under the amendments to the act. Benefits awarded totalled $26,000 per day and about half a million workmen were under the protection of the act. Mr. Shaw estimated that over 100,000 people each year received some part of their maintenance from the benefits provided.

Forecasting what the immediate future held in store for Canada, Mr. Shaw ventured the opinion that the worst would soon be over. He adhered to the well-grounded belief that 1921 would see a large flow of immigration, with all that that meant. Business was gradually settling down to its normal grooves, which, after all, was the most satisfactory token one could look for. The efficiency and the productivity of labor had also increased, due to the inducements of recent unsettled conditions, and these factors would have an important bearing on production and the costs thereof. All these factors, he had emphasized, were conducive to a healthy revival, and would work toward a marked improvement of the present situation, he thought.

"The change," said Mr. Shaw, "which has occurred during 1920 has been an inevitable result of the inauguration of the process of deflation. Just as in the stock market buying is done on a rising market and selling on a falling market, so in the case of commodities. As long as prices were moving upward there was an irresistible tendency to buy, and this worked right through from the ultimate consumer to the manufacturer

"When the pyramid had reached a certain height and the speculators in raw materials began to feel the turn was about due, a selling movement began, slow at first, but steadily gathering momentum. Prices receded right along the line, and then the reverse of what might naturally have been expected occurred. Lower prices, instead of inducing buying, caused an almost complete cessation of buying.

"Precisely as in the stock market, the public refused to buy on a falling market. And they will continue to stay out of the market until prices once more harden."

THE WEEKLY HALF HOLIDAY

IN many cities, towns and villages throughout the Dominion, merchants will be closing one afternoon each week and as in other years Canadian Grocer will again publish a list of the municipalities wherein there is a half holiday each week. It is important that this list be accurate and that every locality be represented as business houses have found this list a valuable one in assisting them to plan the trips of their representatives.

We therefore request merchants to fill in this coupon and return at their earliest convenience.

Discourages Packing Apples in Boxes

Charles Hart, of Hart and Tuckwell, Montreal, Declares That Packing Apples in Boxes is More Expensive, and a Detriment to Increased Consumption—Believes That Demand Will Return to Apples Packed in Barrels

By Staff Correspondent of Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL (Special).—An interesting question with regard to the marketing of Canadian apples has arisen. Wholesale fruit dealers and retailers are discussing the future of the apple market as far as it concerns Canada's production and its sale on the home market. For the past few years the custom of selling apples packed in boxes, graded, in some cases only after a fashion and in other cases on the systematic basis of size, color and quality, has been in vogue. A number of factors have aided in the development of this trade which on a careful study appear to be for the most part only temporary conditions which are already showing signs of changing. The question that now arises is what manner of marketing will be most favored by the Canadian people.

Want Apples in Barrels

Charles Hart, manager of Hart and Tuckwell, wholesale fruit merchants, 163 McGill Street, Montreal, in speaking of this question to a Canadian Grocer representative said, "In the past few years the American apple growers have been gaining a stronger and stronger hold on the Canadian market. Personally I do not think that their quality is any better than that of our own production, but in packing apples in boxes they have perfected the system of grading and so persistently worked for a place on this market that their efforts have been showing fruit. I want to see Canadian apples, especially Ontario apples, packed in barrels for our home trade. There is no doubt that in the past there has been a demand for boxed apples, but I believe that in the future the demand will fall back to the barrel-packing again. In the first place apples packed in boxes are more expensive than those in barrels.

Extravagant Buying

"The reason for the demand for apples in boxes in the past few years has been the extravagance of the people, mainly on account of the comparative looseness of money during the war and in the two years following. The money came easily and went easily and people did not mind paying a high price for rosy colored apples carefully wrapped and packed in boxes. Money is not so easily earned to-day and people are naturally more careful. They have been used to high prices in the past, but are now looking for lower prices in everything Apples packed in barrels are cheaper than those in boxes and it is only natural then to conclude that the demand will revert to the old system of packing.

Certain Demand for Boxed Apples

"There is, however, a certain demand for box packed apples which will always exist on account of those people of wealth in the cities who for the most part measure quality by price. These people are willing to pay the price for the graded apples and therefore create a certain demand for that line.

"It is significant that on the European market Canadian apples are favored and draw a higher price than those of our neighbors across the border. In Europe, despite certain propaganda to the contrary, the demand is for Canadian apples packed in barrels. The apples from British Columbia which reach this market are nearly all packed in boxes and it seems quite natural to buy them that way. Perhaps their quality, their color and keeping ability lend them to this mode. That class of apple, however, has its place and finds a good market but I would not like to see Ontario or eastern provinces apples packed in that way. I feel sure that if they are that it will spoil the market by cutting off the demand."

Barrelled Apples Keep

"The idea that apples packed in boxes keep better than those in barrels has been exploded," said Geo. A. Vipond, manager of T. S. Vipond, wholesale fruit dealers, to a Canadian Grocer representative. "I know they won't, unless each apple is packed more carefully and wrapped in paper, but that only adds to the cost and cuts down the demand, the very thing that we are trying to avoid. What we want is that Canadians shall consider apples as a food and not as a luxury. We want more apples eaten and if they are packed in boxes or wrapped in paper it is only going to scare away the average buyer, and there will be no market for the large production of apples that we have in Canada. The trouble is that we are becoming more 'Americanized' every day. The Americans are dictating to us and in the opinion of those who deal in fruit the packing of apples after the American fashion will cut down our consumption and increase the cost of a fruit that should be very cheap.

Cost of Barrels Responsible

"The high cost of barrels for a number of years was partly responsible fo the use of boxes. Last year they cos $1.60 and then they were hard to ge To-day they can be bought for 75 cent and show signs of going lower. Barrel will again be popular. It is the less ex pensive way of buying and since peopl are all looking for lower prices then th apple packers should not attempt any thing that they know will increase th cost of their product and so cut dow the demand.

Selling Apples by Peck

"The effort on the part of some deal ers to have oranges sold by the peck ha found much favor. In fact the Amer ican producers are fostering it. The why should our Canadian merchant favor a plan which would mean the sell ing of apples by the dozen, the ver thing that they are trying to do awa with in oranges, knowing that they ca sell more by the peck? To me it seem absurd to consider marketing Canadia apples on the home market in daintil done up boxes, wasting money on labo and putting the fruit out of the reac of the masses of the people. What w want to do is to promote the consump tion of apples and that cannot be accom plished by adopting any plan that wil increase the cost of the fruit to the people."

Canadian Grocer would like to hea what other fruit men have to say in thi connection.

A NEW SHOW CASE FOR USE IN GROCERY STORES IS INVENTED

J. Victor Tobey, of Tara, Bruce County, Ontario, has invented a dispensing show case for use in grocery stores, an has applied for patents in both Canad and the United States. It combines a dispensing show case, a display case an silent salesman. It will hold goods of a granular nature such as coffee, rice, tapioca, sugar, etc. The device has a glass front for display, a drawer for sampling immediately underneath and a hinged top for refilling. A unique feature of the bin is the fact that the goods are taken from the bottom as each scoopful is withdrawn, the contents automatically flow to the bottom, together with a portion of that which is in the display front. It thus assures old stock being disposed of first and in refilling the new stock is always on top.

Apparently Ends at Bakeshop Door

"Too Much Care Cannot Be Exercised in the Preparation and Delivery of Bread," Writes Subscriber to Canadian Grocer—Why Should Sanitation End at the Bakeshop Door?

EDITOR, Canadian Grocer:—

On opening your paper to-day I observed your article on the "Bread Question." For some time past I have wanted to say something on this matter and point out things which I consider very wrong and ought to be put an end to quickly.

Each morning on my way to business I notice bread being delivered from a van drawn by a horse, both of which are in a filthy condition, and the driver, whose person and clothes are apparently dirtier still, carrying about fifteen loaves on his shirt sleeve, piled up to and supported by an unshaven face. All this to my mind is most unsanitary, also conducive to spreading disease.

My contention has always been that too much care cannot be exercised in the preparation and delivery of articles for consumption by human beings, and that any person engaged in the delivery of bread should be properly clothed for his calling, also the health authorities should see to this being strictly carried out.

I say most emphatically that all bread should be properly wrapped before being sent out from the bakeshop to ensure cleanliness.

MONTREAL SUBSCRIBER.

When one stops to consider the large amount of money that bread manufacturers have invested in machinery for the purpose of manufacturing their product under the most sanitary conditions, the question arises, why all this sanitation at the factory, if the bread is allowed to leave the factory under conditions that permit of contamination through outside handling, hauling through dusty streets, unwrapped and soaking up every flavor, filth and dirt that it comes in contact with.

Ends at Bakeshop Door

The law in regards to the sanitation of bread and other foodstuff factories is very strict, and inspectors are appointed to see that the law is strictly adhered to. But—as in the case of unwrapped bread—the law in regard to sanitation apparently ends at the bakeshop door. Unwrapped bread is loaded upon wagons, open to the dust-laden streets, and often allowed to remain for hours at the doors of residences without any protection whatever. Manufacturers are likely to say that housewives have a right to be home to accept the bread, but in all cases this is not always possible and often circumstances arise that call for the necessary absence of the housekeeper.

Recently it was called to the attention of the writer of a case where unwrapped bread was left leaning against the wall of the house in the dirt of the sidewalk, although a proper receptacle had been constructed in the wall of the house for the sole convenience of delivery men. If this bread had been wrapped, even in this instance it would have reached the purchaser in a clean manner.

40 to 60 Per Cent. Through Retailers

A recent survey of the bread situation by Canadian Grocer shows that 40 to 60 per cent. of the bread manufactured finally reaches the consumer through the chanels of the retail merchant. This brings up the point whether merchants prefer to handle bread that has been wrapped by the manufacturer or to receive the bread unwrapped and wrap it themselves.

"Our idea of the bread question is that all bread should be wrapped at the factory," stated a merchant in Grand Manan, N.B. "The bread we handle is all wrapped in a waxed semi-transparent paper with the brand printed in large red letters and the name of the bakery printed in blue letters, which makes a very attractive package. We make two cents per loaf and if we have to add extra wrapping we add one cent per loaf. We have never lost a loaf of bread because the waxed paper keeps the air from the bread and it will keep moist for several days. Another feature is that the bread reaches the customer in the same sanitary, clean condition in which it left the factory."

A Reasonable Margin

"Our sales on bread run from 500 to 600 loaves a week," said a merchant in Western Ontario. "Considering the cost of paper and twine our profit is very small. We feel that if all bread was wrapped by the manufacturer it would not only give us a more reasonable margin, but would also give better and more sanitary service to the public."

The above statements open up another point on the bread question, and that is which is the most profitable to handle, wrapped or unwrapped bread, as viewed from the angle of margin of profit and the loss through waste from bread becoming stale. Another article dealing with these points will appear in an early issue. In the meantime, Canaditn Grocer will be glad to receive merchants' views on this subject.

THE MENACE OF THE PEDLAR

Second of a Series by A. B. C.

In the first article in last week's issue the point was dealt with as to why the pedlar was getting more and more business from customers of the legitimate retailer. The suggestion was made by a merchant that the pedlar was able to sell at a lower price goods similar to those retailers were offering for sale. Naturally the pedlar won out. His idea was that the merchant should sell articles that the pedlar could not duplicate.

Most pedlars of food-stuff articles start out with tea. The natural reason is that there are a hundred and one different kinds and grades of tea at a hundred and one different prices. The pedlar is one of the most persistent salesmen. He does not lie down on the job when he knocks at the door. He sticks. Most women when they purchase tea at a grocery store pay a fairly good price for it. The pedlar always has tea lower than that price. Nobody knows but himself what he has paid for it or what kind of tea it is. But it is tea.

He naturally gets a lot of the tea business if his tea is just "tea" and if the retailer is simply selling "tea." He doesn't sell sugar because there is no money in sugar for him. Sugars are much the same in quality and sweetening powers so that he can't buy cheap sugar. So he starts out with tea and gradually the list on his wagon is enlarged to include coffee, cocoa, spices, extracts, etc. These are all lines of varying cost and quality —unless under a manufacturer's brand—and as the consumer does not know the quality, she buys because the price is lower.

In the next article the point as to how the merchant can overcome the tea problem will be discussed. In the meantime the writer would like to hear from any merchant with experiences as to how he has overcome the pedlar difficulty.

Arranging a Merchandising Program

Planning the Store's Activities For Five Months Ahead—On a Buyer's Market Gives Opportunity to Pick Up Good Specials to be Offered at Tempting Prices With a Profit—Value to Advertising and Display

"THE old idea of a sale was to clean out odd ends and lines of your stock. During such a sale you expected to lose a good deal of money. Morcover, during this sale people would be constantly asking for something you didn't have and my idea is that a merchant should make every effort to have everything that the customer wants.

"The new idea of a sale, particularly on a buyer's market, is to go out and buy specials in whatever line you may want them and run them, not under the name of a sale—that word has been worked to death—but as a 'special,' or an 'event,' or whatever name you may choose. In that way you have something of real value to offer the public, and if you keep your stock in the proper shape and follow from one end of the year to the other a wise buying policy there are not many fag ends to your stock that necessitate a big sale of left overs. In this kind of sale, moreover, there is a good profit to be had, for you can buy real bargains to-day and offer then to the public at prices that equal pre-war prices."

Merchandising Program

So spoke the head of a large grocery store to Canadian Grocer recently. A close student of the trend of business, he was among the first to take his losses last Fall and get his stock in good shape for the coming months that were bound to be fraught with a good deal of uncertainty. But he did not expect to lie down and let business drift into his store as it would. He is not made of that kind of timber. If Mohamet does not go to the mountain he believes in taking the mountain to Mohamet. In other words, he knew that the day of getting business without any great effort was past, so he decided that more aggressive methods of getting business were necessary. He knew, as many a retailer is finding out today, that when people were about to start out on a shopping expedition, they were going to "look around" to see where the best value could be had, for it is good value at a low price that the consumer is after to-day. Slow deliveries and part shipments of orders were no longer a bogey; he could get what he wanted when he wanted it.

On the first of February, therefore, he called together his staff and arranged a merchandising program for the coming five months. The activities of each week were carefully outlined, having in view that good specials could be picked up here and there, offered to the public at a tempting price, and with a fair margin of profit. This principle of arranging a merchandising program can be easily worked out in any man's store. The same conditions prevail with regard to most lines. There is the same opportunity to pick up specials and make good profit out of them by offering them to the public at tempting prices.

A Week of "Events"

For instance, the 8th of May was Mothers' Day. This store referred to took cognizance of this day and featured throughout the store articles that were appropriate to the occasion. From the 9th to the 14th of the month special selling events took place, and the week closed up with a one-day event in which 99 cents was the feature price. In arranging this program each week had one day set aside for a special price to obtain throughout the whole store, like the 99-cent day referred to, though it was not always 99 cents.

The Value to Buyers

The arranging of such a program has proven of great value to the buyer in this store, and for a very obvious reason. The head of one department in looking over his program knows, for instance, that during a week in June he will be running a special event in a certain line. He has weeks to look around for the merchandise for that particular event, looking into the question of value and price. By the time the event is staged he has been able to select the very best merchandise on the market for that one event and he knows he is offering the best price to the consumer, which is one of the big considerations at the present time. In talking over the program, the head of this firm said that this feature of it has been most valuable during the last two months and that it has enabled him to make a fair margin of profit on many of the special events that have been put on since the first of February. He showed the writer some of these specials and we can vouch for their quality and the margin of profit made.

Value to Advertising and Display

The arrangement of a program so long ahead is also invaluable to advertising and window displays. The advertising man feels that he has a new weapon in his hand in being able to talk of new merchandise at tempting prices. There is something depressing to the advertising man to have to talk enthusiastically over odds and ends of various lines of merchandise. But when he has bright, new merchandise, just fresh from the wholesaler or the manufacturer, which is to be offered at a price that looks like 1913, it gives him new enthusiasm with which to take on his work. He can work the new idea with regard to sales to the very limit, pointing out that this merchandise is not shop-worn, but fresh; he can avoid the use of comparative figures which many advertising men believe to be harmful to business to-day.

The plan is of equal benefit to the window display man. He knows weeks ahead what the nature of many of his window displays will be, and what will have to be done in the way of interior display. Successful window displays, so say men engaged in this work, depend upon a thorough planning of the work. Here is the very chance he is looking for, and he proceeds to make the most out of it. By the time one of the events is to be staged, he has every little detail in connection with window dressing and interior display worked out.

GETTING THE EARLY BUYER

Many are the selling plans devised by merchants to stimulate business. All of them are good, but the plan adopted by an Ontario merchant to induce customers to do their shopping in the early hours of the morning is worthy of consideration. His plan is to have what he terms "Morning Hour Sales." Every morning between the hours of nine and ten, this merchant has a special sale on a few lines that are seasonable. These articles are usually odd lots that he has picked up at wholesale houses at reduced prices which the merchant in turn is able to offer to his customers at special prices, that will show some profit or at least allow the merchant to get his money back. No telephone orders are taken for these articles, nor are they charged. Every customer must go to the store for them and pay cash.

Articles that are to be on sale the following morning are attractively displayed in the window the preceding afternoon, and the display is accompanied with price tickets and a large show card announcing that the articles will be on sale the following morning between the hours of nine and ten. These early morning sales have been very successful and have proved the means of bracing up business for the whole day.

Attractive Interior Displays in the Store Will Mean Increased Sales and Add New Customers

An arrangement such as the above catches the eye of the customer at once and creates favorable comment. Note the display of fruits and the showcases for showing confectionery lines. Interior displays, coupled with window displays, always mean more business.

This Grocer Provides an Unusual Service to His District

Webster's Grocery in South Vancouver, Situated in a Pioneer District, Carries a Stock Of Blasting Powder—This Service Helps Trade in Grocery Lines

SOUTH VANCOUVER (Special).—Webster's Grocery, on Main Street, has a most unusual side line on which the greatest popularity hinges. A few lines of kitchen and laundry hardware were carried as a convenience to the neighborhood. The whole district is yet in the pioneer stage. Great stumps measuring one to ten feet in diameter still stand, and offer the greatest difficulty to the clearing of land. A great deal of blasting powder is used to blow out these stumps, but a special license is required to sell explosives and a special steel and cement powder house must be used, which must be several hundred yards from the nearest house. Consequently it has become more difficult to buy stumping powder.

An Unusual Specialty

Here is where Mr. Webster has made his name famous. He has made a specialty of stumping powder, fuses, etc. He built the necessary powder house and he serves many in Vancouver, South Vancouver, Burnaby and neighboring municipalities. This is a good example of the success that attends the efforts of one who sizes up an opportunity— and acts.

The grocery busines has not been neglected in the meantime. The credit business has been cut down to a minimum.

Carries Standard Remedies

This grocer also carries a small assortment of standard remedies, and a few of the most frequently called for standards such as castor oil, sulphur, Epsom salts, etc.

If everybody sold blasting powder, Mr. Webster would probably have some other specialty. There always is a profitable specialty if a little diligence is put into the search for it.

Serving Customers In Rural Sections During the Summer

Hunstein & Grice, merchants, of Cargill, Ont., Bruce County, commenced their rural delivery service plan in May 1st, and it will be continued until late in the fall. This system of rural delivery service adopted by the Cargill firm is for the convenience of their rural patrons during the busy summer months. A certain day in each week is set apart for each line leading to the rural sections, and on this day the firm attends to the needs of their patrons in some rural district. The orders are sent in by telephone and the goods delivered by motor to the farmer's door. Anything in the line of produce is also taken in exchange and conveyed to town in the firm's delivery car.

Thinks a Credit Business is Best

Vancouver Firm Conducts 70 Per Cent. of Its Business on Credit Basis and States Losses Are Not a Noticeable Fraction of One Per Cent.

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER (Special).— "There are many grocers doing a strictly cash business," said Mr. Morrow, of Morow and Deane, 2200 West Seventh Avenue, Vancouver. "Those in favor of strictly cash business and who say that credit is unnecessary, unjustified, and is rapidly being eliminated can quote many examples to show the improvement that a change to cash basis has made.

"Goes Wherever She Likes"

"The fact is, however, that a cash customer boasts that she goes wherever she likes, and distributes her patronage rather largely. You always hear a customer, in discussing a weekly account, say: 'I pay cash with each order, and buy wherever I can do best. If I am down town, or can go down, I take advantage of the specials, and I really save dollars and dollars,' You have all heard the cash and credit business discussed frequently—but from the customers' standpoint. Well, I agree that she is right. The cash customer is very fickle. You cannot depend on her business until after she has read the daily paper to see what she has to get near at hand.

Buys Less on Cash Basis

"On credit account, by which I mean accounts paid every week, or at latest, once a month, you get practically the entire grocery business. When a woman says that she buys less when paying cash, she's telling the truth, but as long as the bills are paid promptly when due, the grocer need not concern himself about the domestic budget of his customer. If she will buy olives over the telephone, and would hesitate to put out 45 cents over the counter for them, that is better business for the grocer. He is in business to sell olives. The down-town store or the movie theatre is not worrying because Mrs. Jones spends 55 cents for a matinee, that she might better have spent for butter.

70 Per Cent. Credit

"We and the movie men, and the soda fountain men and the newsstand man are all competing to get Mrs. Jones' 55 cents. Seventy-five per cent. of our business is credit business, and our losses are not a noticeable fraction of one per cent. Such customers are regular, constant, loyal, and profitable. We give them good service, they have come to expect it, and if they deal elsewhere they would miss it.

"An account system, convenient and fireproof, takes care of the details. Any mistakes that may be made in extensions are caught the same evening when posting. A large safe takes care of books, unbanked cash and policies.

Insures Against Mistakes

"This is a load off a man's mind," said Mr. Deane, "when all your records are safe from fire. Apart from business incapacity, I think that fire is one of the greatest dangers a merchant faces. Our account record system insures us against mistakes and our accounts against fire."

The counters in this store are equipped with glass fronted display bins, and together with the mirror-fronted oak spice display cabinet, and the glass-fronted tea and coffee bins, make a very bright and attractive store.

Vancouver Grocer Is Now Selling Bananas by Weight

Vancouver, May 13.—"In the old days," said Mr. White, of White's Grocery, 2935 Granville Street, Vancouver, B.C., to a representative of Canadian Grocer, "we used to hand up a bunch of bananas, put a price per dozen on them and lose money. The only way we could hand them out would be as they ripened. If a customer asked for a dozen bananas, we would have to choose the ones that had ripened, taking large or small, as they came. If the customer was a particularly fussy shopper, she would personally superintend the operation, and you can rest assured that she didn't choose the small ones. By the time the bunch had been pretty well wrecked, the under-sized bananas left would have to be put into a basket and sold at a reduction. Now we sell by weight. At first the customer used to say, 'Well, I don't know how many I want then.' We would simply point out that she might buy half a dozen or a dozen or ten, or any number she chose. We would simply charge her for the amount she bought. Now there is splendid satisfaction all round, and we can figure on a certain margin of profit, and approximate something near it."

Does a Large Credit Business

This store does a large credit business. Statements are sent out promptly and 75 per cent. of all outstanding accounts are paid by the 10th of the month. No chances are taken with the remainder.

"I have no solicitors out at present," continued Mr. White. "I have found that the idea of trailing a moving van and tackling the new-comer for his business throws the onus of his credit on to me. If the customer comes into the store to open an account, I can set the terms and have the best position to take in case of tardiness of payment."

Table Displays of Package Lines That Mean Sales

Vancouver (Special).—Some grocers may rail at the groceterias, etc., but one Vancouver merchant finds it more profitable to take a leaf out of their book. In Galloway's Grocery, 2091 West Fourth Avenue, Canadian Grocer noticed that counters and display tables were piled with orderly displays of packaged sugar, packaged beans, barley, sago, rice, cream of wheat and such lines.

"A customer finds it helpful to see a package labelled split peas and marked 25 cents," remarked Mr. Galloway. "She finds it hard otherwise to visualize just how much of split peas or oat meal a 25-cent piece will buy. A pound, two pounds or five pounds doesn't mean so much in sizing up prices as to see the actual quantities weighed out. We have had great success with these packaged displays of standard lines.

"The very appearance of these labelled packages is a suggestion, frequently acted upon, and in rush hours, it is a great convenience for us to have so many bulk lines packaged in advance."

SWEET CHOCOLATE HELD TO BE FOOD, NOT CANDY

Boston, May 23.—Sweet chocolate is a distinct food product and the Government cannot sweep it within the scope of the word "candy," Federal Judge James M. Morton, jr., has ruled. He directed a jury to find for Walter M. Baker & Co., plaintiffs in a suit to recover $60,000 in manufacturers' excise taxes paid during six months of 1919.

Similar suits by other chocolate makers, counsel for whom prosecuted the Baker case, will be filed for recovery of millions in excise taxes paid on their product, it is stated.

Advertising Campaign Will Help Increase Consumption of Confectionery

Second Day of Third Annual Convention of the Canadian Confectionery, Biscuit and Chocolate Manufacturers Has Interesting Programme—Officers Elected

TORONTO, May 18.—The second day of the third annual convention of the Canadian confectionery, biscuit and chocolate manufacturers was for the most part taken up with the regular business routine. In discussing the point as to whether a national advertising campaign should be launched similar to that of three years ago, C. Currie, of D. S. Perrin & Co., London, thought it would be a good idea to spend the money in advertising, to increase the consumption of confectionery. Now that the prices are lower the public should be made aware of the fact. It would tend to increase the sales.

Allan Ross, of the Wrigley Company, Toronto, believed that there was nothing like persistent advertising, but he thought that an advertising campaign at the present time would hardly be effective in view of the fact that the Canadian Manufacturing Association were launching a campaign on "Made-in-Canada" goods. Many of the confectionery manufacturers had already subscribed to that fund. Frank O'Connor, Toronto, said that he thought the best plan would be to advertise the food value of candy, and say nothing at all about the price, because everything was coming down, and the people were finding that out. The main point was to educate the public along the line of the value of candy as a food. Other members entered heartily into this discussion, but it was finally left to the executive committee for a decision.

New Officers Elected

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, William Robertson, Toronto; first vice-president, Dudley Dingle, Winnipeg; second vice-president, H. N. Cowan, Toronto; treasurer, Colin Currie, London; secretary, C. J. Bodley, Toronto; executive committee, J. Allan Ross, Toronto; Harvey Shaw, Edmonton; A. Hamblin, Kitchener; Frank McCormick, London; E. Littler, Montreal; A. N. D. Ganong, St. Stephen; F. W. Bear, Woodstock; C. E. Edmunds, Toronto; Mordon Neilson, Toronto.

Trade Commissioner Speaks.

Lloyd Harris, former Canadian trade commissioner, was the chief speaker at the banquet, which concluded the convention at the King Edward Hotel on Wednesday evening. Mr. Harris was scheduled to speak on "Trade Conditions in Canada," but he explained that the manufacturers knew more about it than he himself.

"We knew this depression was coming, We hoped against hope that it would not come," said Mr. Harris. "Now that it is here, the best thing is to face it, and to take drastic steps to overcome it. To that end it is necessary that in the period of readjustment all will accept their losses.

"We know that one of the worst things the government could do was to impose a business profits tax. There is nothing like this tax which helped to bring about present conditions. I am not looking for any great revival within a month or two, but in the meantime we should get our house in order and our organizations in shape, if we want to start in on a sound basis when business goes back to its former prosperity."

Will Have to Do Their Share.

"During the coming months, you men who go out for orders will not have them handed to you on silver platters. You will have to fight for your orders," declared Mr. Harris. Our retailers and labor will have to do their share in accepting the losses which this period of reconstruction necessarily brings along with it. The labor situation is a serious obstacle in the way to bring things back to normal basis."

"One thing that would help the situation," concluded Mr. Harris, "would be the harvesting of a bumper crop in the West this year, as in 1915. The Canadian West is in bad shape to-day. Prices were the lowest paid for years. Many farmers had to borrow money, and got behind. A bumper crop will save us."

How To Get Rid of Ants

By CHAS. PIKE, Vancouver, B.C.

WHEN in California some ten years ago, my store was frequently raided by ants, and as the result of many attempts to rid the premises of the pest, I found the following most successful.

A solution was procured from the druggist, consisting of a quarter of an ounce of arsenite of soda in three quarts of light sugar syrup. Immediately on detecting an ant we sought the direction of their line of march. They usually travelled a path about an inch in width. Where the path entered the store or as near as possible, we placed a turned-down saucer, placing a small portion of the solution on top. The rim of the saucer prevented the solution spreading and the slope of the saucer allowed the ants to freely run over it.

Centred Around Syrup

As soon as one ant discovered the syrup, he carried the good news to his fellows and within half an hour they would all desert the other attractions. Apparently they returned to the nest or colony and made converts of the ants at home or while marauding in other directions. Eventually the saucer became swarmed with ants, and they would keep it up for hours, depending upon the size of the colony. This resulted in killing all the ants and we were free from ant-worry for some months.

Put Sponge in Paper Bag

If an ant colony was observed near the house, a trap was laid by soaking a small sponge in the solution, placing it in a paper bag with one corner torn off to make an entrance. The bag was then hung on a post or the side of the house, a couple of feet from the ground, where the ants readily found it. This system was elaborated by the University of California and the adjacent municipality of Berkely had, at the time I left, almost got rid of their ant troubles by employing a squad of men to apply the remedy.

Follow the First Ant

The instinct of the ant is to surmount rather than go around an obstruction. I have seen a tribe of ants walk for hours up one side of my store. over the roof and down the other side, in order to reach some garbage, just because the ant who found it first happened to be travelling that way, though much easier and shorter routes were available.

OTTAWA EAST GROCERS CLOSE NOW ON WEDNESDAY AFTERNOONS

Ottawa, Ont., May 23. — Beginning Wednesday, May 18, M. J. Ade, W. Lavine, Perrabe Bros., J. H. Shouldice and C. N. Palmer, grocers, of Ottawa East, will close their stores every Wednesday through the summer and possibly continue it all the year round if business permits. Several Ottawa grocers did the same last summer and will likely do so again.

Simple Accounting is Grocer's Guide

Simplicity, Economy of Time, and Efficiency Are All Embodied in This Merchant's System of Keeping "Tab" on His Business —Quantity Buying Plus Quantity Selling is All Right

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

IT is always pleasing to get hold of a simple system whereby any grocer keeps tab on his business. I have one before me which fills the bill admirably. The grocer calls it his "guide" and that is just what it is. For simplicity I do not see how it could be bettered.

It is a sheet of paper about twenty inches square, ruled with regular faint lines across and having vertical columns as follows: Narrow for dates, one wide for "remarks," then seven others about one inch wide, each headed respectively cost of goods, kind of goods, mark up, customers' daily, sales, discounts and expense.

One line is used for each day, the date column carrying simply the number of each day. The remarks column is used, evidently, to indicate the general character of the goods or the principal item of expense or expenditure of the day, because I find "monthly wages" there followed by entries in all the various columns on the first of February. The item of $200 under expense indicates that this was the principal item in mind that day.

Cost of goods and mark-up are splendid, for such entries necessitate the figuring of each invoice and the ascertainment of the exact gross yield thereof. Nothing could be more conducive to safe and sane figuring than such a constant check as must arise from this practice. Between cost of goods and mark-up comes kind of goods. That is used, apparently, like remarks, to indicate just the general or preponderating items, because I find "bread" entered when purchases run from $45.38 to $65.40, and that is more bread than such a store could sell in any day. Again I find "fruits, etc.," with total purchases of over $500 at a time, so evidently fruits was just one thing that predominated that day.

If more bills are paid than can be entered on one line during the month, they are bunched at the end, the few lines over in February being thus used. Payments bunched into the last few days are segregated only as to discounts taken, those being entered on the remaining lines as coffee discount, grocery discount, cigar discount, etc.

Simplicity, Economy of Time, Efficiency

Here then is seen the month's business at a glance. The totals can be entered in the general ledger once each month, all of which makes for simplicity without the sacrifice of efficiency, but actually with the promotion of it, and with great economy of time and effort. Anv system such as this which marshals before the merchant all the facts of his business once each month is invaluable.

Then, as the totals are posted to the various ledger accounts, he cannot fail to compare them with the previous month's records. He will glance up the columns involuntarily and stop to think over what they mean. He will thus get into his head and carry with him all the time a picture of exactly what his business is doing. Such a man may have enterprise, ambition and imagination, so he can expand, grow and plan ahead; but his feet will always be firmly planted on the ground.

Naturally, with such a splendid little system, you will look for other evidences of efficiency. You will not be disappointed here, for these are this merchant's comments:

"Selling prices being $4,528 and cost $3,833, we have $695 gross margin. That figures 15.3 per cent. on monthly purchases." So, with $4,310 sales, we have earnings of $659.43. Expenses have been $326.34 or 7.08 on sales, leaving $333.09 or 7.72 per cent. on sales, to which we add the discount earned of $22.11, which makes up the remaining half per cent. and gets back to our 15.3 per cent. margin. So here is net earning of upwards of 8 per cent. and over $4,300 a year on a business running probably around $53,000 sales.

"Our stock at retail runs $2,000 except during the fall months, so we turn our stock twice a month, don't we?" Yes, probably; for with $53,000 sales and $2,000 stock at retail it would be turned 26½ times a year. Making allowance for the heavier fall stock, probably it runs to 24 turns a year. That is a remarkable record. I feel sure it would not have been made except for this constant check of habitual accounting.

"On ten-day grocery purchases we take off discounts on invoice instead of discount column." That is all right on a small business, and where one knows details so intimately.

Discount a Separate Earnings

In larger accounting discount is kept as an earnings distinct and separate from merchandise. Merchandise is always figured in at flat invoice cost, except for trade or quarterly discount. Time discount is a capital earnings and should be so considered. But so long as it is as clearly understood and carefully handled as this man handles it, no need to change the method.

"Our average expense is $290 monthly." That would be just over 6.56 per cent., so the showing would be better than I make it; but let it stand either way, it is splendid.

Can you see how such a store is immune to the inroads of competition? It can survive and grow, making money for its owners, no matter what "others may do." I put that in quotations because it is one of the bogies of which the majority of grocers talk and are afraid. The way to progress is to know what you are doing; face issues; figure accurately to the last fraction; work; be alert. Such men will win out always, but the room for the easy-going boys with the "beguess and begosh" plan of operation is getting narrower with each passing day.

"Wages constitute two proprietors, rent paid senior member, the owner." That is all to the good. These men not only work but pay themselves wages for their efforts and rent for the one's property. Thus every tub stands on its own bottom. The net earnings at the year end are real.

"All goods purchased by the proprietors at retail prices for home use—for cash." Another plain, splendid plan. That is the way to do it!

"Our main lookout is study the weather or season, then suggest goods that make an appetite—the rest is easy. Now in springlike weather canned fruits, also dried fruits, sell well." In other words, these men are also sellers of merchandise. They keep in mind the customer, what she is apt to want, what will please her if she gets it, and they suggest to her those lines or things. "Easy?" Yes. The grocery business is a simple business to run. It is always seasonable, and the man who studies it with his whole brain will find it become the most fascinating thing he can think of. "There's no fun like work!"

How much better, for instance, is the condition of this concern than it would be were it to expand into heavier stocks, wider lines. The keeping of the stock at the minimum practicable limit of $2,000 retail, which means just about $1,700 cost, by the way, in this case, and the turning of it more than twice each month is vastly more profitable than to have stock lying around so thick that extra help must be hired to care for it. And this is accomplished only by watchfulness.

Quantity Buying Plus Quantity Selling O.K.

All of this is not inconsistent with the buying of quantities, provided you then turn in and sell quantities. To revert to an illustration I used a few weeks ago on catsup: If you take on six cases where you had formerly bought one because your sales were one a month, and immediately push the sale to two a month by making the price 23 instead of 25 cents, two for 45 cents, on the cost of $4.05 the case you will make $1.35 gross or $8.10 on the six-case lot. Take the expense plus the load of 20 per cent. off this—sales or $32.40 showing $6.48—and the net is $1.62. Multiply that by four turns in a year and you have earnings of $6.48. Divide that by the capital used, $24.30, and you have net capital earnings of 28.31 per cent. plus.

In this case you have to remember that the single case monthly turn would have paid you $3.60 on $4.50 capital, and you can then consider whether the other factors of advantage offset the smaller capital ratio. The expectation of still larger sales later on may justify the smaller margin you make now. There are many factors. I show a few of them as I go on. If you will do the thinking clearly and consistently, you will get a lot out of these studies. One advantage is they are based on actualities—not imaginings.

For example, one grocer read a book on fruit retailing a time ago. He then studied the suggestions and put everything into practice—he did not dream! Now he writes: "Have doubled our fruit sales and increased our profits on other groceries from information obtained from the book." He thought far enough to apply the principles of sound retailing—which are the same in everything—not only to fruits, but to other things. It pays him. It will pay you.

A Study of Coffee Helps Its Sale

Manager of a Large Wholesale Grocery House Talks of How Coffee is Tested; the Importance of Correct Roasting; History of Coffee, Etc.—"It is a Lifetime Study," he Says

CHARLES A. ELLIOTT, a former Western Ontario boy, now head of the coffee department of a large wholesale grocery house in Evansville, Ind., recently gave an interesting interview on how coffee is tested, the importance of correct roasting, history of coffee, etc.

"It's a lifetime study," he said. The room where he makes the tests contains small coffee scales, cups and spoons arranged near his testing table, which is round and swings on a pivot in order to save him the trouble of walking around it.

"The water must be boiling to 250 degrees Fahrenheit, and poured on a finely ground coffee. The aroma is noted, and after three minutes of infusion the tasting starts. It sounds like a soup kitchen in Moscow, for the one who is testing does not swallow the coffee. He merely tastes it and spits it out.

A "Hard Drinker"

"The work may go on like that for days until a decision is reached on the merits of the blend.

"The man who roasts the coffee is most responsible for its taste," says Mr. Elliott.

"He must keep cool-headed, for in the last two or three minutes of a roast great care must be exercised. Some varieties must roast slowly, others more rapidly. The coffee roaster must watch closely to bring out the aromatic oils contained in the cells of the coffee bean.

"Modern machinery has greatly simplified his worok. All large plants have machinery for cleaning, milling and separating the coffee beans. After the dust and chaff are blown out the coffee has lost from 14 to 18 per cent. in weight. It is run through pneumatic tubes and into a labelling machine that does the work which formerly required six girls."

In speaking of the history of coffee, Mr. Elliott said:

"Coffee is believed to have come from a district in Abyssinia called Kaffa. It was used as a food in its berry form and the wood of the tree was also used for building purposes as far back as Solomon's time.

"It is believed that it was carried from Abyssinia to Arabia by the Mohammedan priests.

"Mocha has always been noted for its fine coffee, but no coffee came out of the port for over 200 years before the world war. Its exportation was then made possible when the allies removed the sand bar that obstructed the harbor.

"In 1663 shipments of coffee were made to Holland, and later Louis XIV of France obtained some plants from that country. About the same time its use as a beverage was being discovered in England.

"There are many stories told of the coffee-houses that were opened in all the countries where the beverage was known. In Constantinople the coffee-houses had to be closed because everybody went to them instead of attending church.

"In Queen Anne's reign in England there were over 3,000 coffee-houses in London where all classes of people mingled.

"The first public notice of a coffee-house in America was inserted in the New York Gazette, July 28, 1729. A reception was given to George Washington in 1789 at this same coffee-house.

"New Orleans was long celebrated for its coffeehouses, as well as Boston and other cities in the New England states."

Should Encourage Importation of British Sugars

Under the new tariff ruling, the duty on preferential raw sugar, that is, British West Indies sugars, is reduced from 1.0375 cents to .85 cents for 96 degree test sugars. On the other hand on the general tariff-non-preferential sugars—the duty is increased from 1.37½ cents to 1.68712 cents, an increase of 31 cents per hundredweight, thus increasing the preferential in favor of British-grown sugars by about 50 cents per hundred pounds.

There has been a very heavy shrinkage of importations of British-grown sugars during the past year. The total amount of British-grown sugar imported into Canada for the fiscal year ending February, 1921, was 100,730,053 pounds as compared with 182,612,385 pounds in 1920 and 179,366,072 pounds in 1919.

For the same period in 1921 the importations from Cuba amounted to 294,780,105 pounds. From the United States, 116,643,320 pounds and from San Domingo 56,271,165 pounds.

TO SAVE TROUBLE

A Northern Ontario editor tells of an old Indian that came into his office to subscribe for the paper.

The editor took the money. Then the Indian wanted a receipt. The editor tried to talk him out of it. Mr. Indian insisted on getting a receipt. After making it out, the editor asked him why he was so persistent in wanting a receipt.

The Indian said: "Me die some day and go to big gate. Saint Peter ask if I been good Indian. I say, yes. He say, did you pay your debts? I say, yes. He say, did you pay editor for paper? I say, yes. He say, where is receipt? I not have it. I have to run all over hell to find you and get a receipt."

ARE NOT THE FACTS

THE ATTENTION of Canadian Grocer has been drawn to a letter appearing recently in the columns of the daily press, in which statements are made reflecting unfairly on the retail trade of Canada, and which are not in accordance with facts.

We cannot, of course, claim to speak for retail merchants of all trades in Canada, but as far as the grocery trade is concerned we can without any hesitation assert that any attempt to show that merchants are overcharging the public should meet with the heartiest condemnation. The methods of honest legitimate retail grocers are open and above board, and efforts made to divert public patronage from the regular retailer to what are generally called co-operative stores have not met with entire success. At this time, when every wise retail merchant is endeavoring to bring down his prices, in keeping with market declines, the assertion that overcharging is taking place is at once absurd.

Any intelligent person who understands the underlying principles of merchandising realizes that the very fact that retail stores in all lines of retail trade in every country in the world are still in the field, advertising and doing, is good evidence that the basis on which they are established is a necessary and a sound one.

Retail merchants conducting their business along the right lines, giving service in keeping with correct merchandising, have had nothing to fear, in the way of the competition of stores operated on the co-operative plan. The experience of retailers where such stores are established in their midst has proved this statement.

U. S. EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL

THE EMERGENCY Tariff Bill of the United States has been adopted by Congress by a substantial majority, and now goes into effect as soon as the President signs it, which it is expected will take place immediately.

With the passing of this bill Canada is chiefly affected in the matter of her farm products, and the levying of heavy duties now on wheat, potatoes and cattle has generally been looked upon in this country as a detriment to Canada's export trade in this regard. Canada's exports in these products to the United States are on a large order. In the first eleven months of 1920 Canada shipped into the United States 8,970,754 bushels of wheat, more than she imported from the United States. In cattle, flax seed and potatoes Canada sells more to the United States than she buys from the United States, according to the figures for 1919 and 1920. In beef and mutton the trade balance is in Canada's favor, but in fresh pork and bacon and hams Canada buys more than she sells.

This new bill provides a duty of 35 cents a bushel, and an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. on wheat, flour and semolina. A duty of 25 cents per bushel is levied on potatoes, while cattle are taxed 30 per cent. on ad valorem basis. Fresh or frozen meats are now assessed two cents per pound, butter and substitutes 6 cents per pound, cheese and substitutes 23 per cent. ad valorem and apples 30 cents per bushel.

These are the products with which the Canadian exporter is chiefly concerned, and which it is felt in some sections will discourage the cattle industry, forcing the Canadian breeder to seek a market elsewhere. Likewise are the potato growers of the Maritime affected, in the way of finding a market for their surplus potato crops.

MUST EDUCATE THE PUBLIC

> "A few weeks ago the packing houses in this city compelled their employees to accept a considerable decrease in wages, yet I, as one of the public, fail to notice a particle of difference in the price of the products of this industry."

THE above is an excerpt from a letter which recently appeared in a Toronto daily newspaper. The writer is apparently a railroad employee and endeavors to point out that the high railroad wages should be maintained in spite of the fact that all other industries are making recessions. This correspondent argues that a continuance of the high wages is justifiable, simply because "the manufacturer after gaining his point does not lower the cost of his products."

The state of this writer's mind coincides with that of the greater portion of the consuming public. They do not appreciate the fact that prices—and especially food commodities—are down considerably. Apparently they are quite content to skim over the surface and not bother with digging up the facts, but they are quite willing to continue laying the responsibility upon the manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer. In the case of the packing industry, for instance, since the wage reduction, prices of packing house products have declined 17.96 per cent. and during the past year the decline amounts to 35 per cent., while on the other hand freight rates have advanced 40 per cent.

This, then, brings us to the point that it is up to the retail merchants to educate the public that prices are down and that the purchasing power of the dollar is about one-third greater than a year ago. Some merchants are doing this, as is evidenced by an advertisement which recently appeared in a daily newspaper. This merchant says that, "These goods are not old stock, but were purchased at the new low market price—hence we can offer them at a lower price."

Lindsay Business Men Are Forming Board of Trade

After a number of unsuccessful attempts to form a Board of Trade, the business men of Lindsay, Ont., now appear to be on the right road, and are expecting big results from the campaign now being carried on to obtain members.

A committee was formed and two men chosen to captain sides in the effort to get members. These positions were taken by H. Brimwell and F. Forbet, merchants. The campaign is of two weeks' duration and the organization is assured of at least three hundred members.

The membership is made up of business men in the town and representative farmers of the surrounding district. The latter members are being secured as this is almost entirely an agricultural district.

Ottawa Merchants Will Fight The "Donation" Nuisance

Claiming that the importunities of those who are in the habit of conducting tombolas, euchres, concerts, etc., for charitable and other purposes seeking prizes and donations, is a serious inconvenience and financial loss to the merchants, the Ottawa branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada has launched a campaign to put a stop to it. At a special meeting of the branch the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, the merchants and maufacturers of the city are beset from time to time with requests from the public for donations, tombola prizes, advertisements to church magazines, purchases of tickets, floor and window space in stores, be it resolved that petitions be circulated amongst the merchants and manufacturers asking them to pledge themselves to refuse such demands in future."

It was pointed out by some of the merchants that the indiscriminate canvassing of merchants and manufacturers for donations of different descriptions had reached such a pitch that it had become a nuisance, and something had to be done. As a result of the meeting it was decided to appoint twenty teams, comprised of members of the association, who will conduct an active canvass of the merchants and manufacturers of Ottawa for the purpose of having them sign agreements against giving donations in the future.

Merchants In Lindsay Adopt Union Delivery

A union delivery system is being used by a majority of the grocers and dry goods merchants of Lindsay, Ont.

A five-wagon service is being operated by Kennedy Bros. and four deliveries per day are given in all parts of the town with five on Saturdays. Every wagon has a certain route to cover, and the goods are all collected by each man before he commences delivery. The goods are then placed in route order and taken as they come irrespective of the merchant from whom they were bought.

This service costs each merchant about the amount which would be required to pay a delivery man's salary.

The system is working very satisfactorily.

Canada's Imports Still Heavier Than Exports

Canada's external trade in the new fiscal year commencing in April is following much the same pace as in the final months of the preceding year. Exports during April totalled $43,280,735 and imports were valued at $65,310,827, making an unfavorable trade balance of $23,030,000. As compared with April of last year exports decreased by $10,000,000 and imports fell off to the extent of nearly $33,000,000. Lower prices of all commodities account for a portion of the decreases. Agricultural exports are holding up best.

As compared with last year, exports of iron and steel, etc., declined more than 50 per cent. to $2,537,552; other ores, metals and metal manufactures dropped from $2,917,418 last April to $1,356,982 for the month under review. Non-metallic minerals were exported to the value of $1,365,848, against $2,007,187 for April, 1920.

The importation of iron, steel and manufactures thereof dropped from $3,462,289 free and $15,102,494 dutiable in April of last year to $1,390,677 and $10,099,356 in the current report. A considerable amount of other decreases is accounted for by price declines.

E. B. Ratcliffe, Limited, Hamilton, Ont., has recently been incorporated under the Ontario Companies' Act to carry on a general business. The company is capitalized at $40,000.

Cannot Be Sold As a Substitute For Vinegar

Regulations covering pure food laws, as recently published in Canadian Grocer, have been amended in regard to vinegar substitutes as follows:

Sections three hundred and sixty-six and three hundred and sixty-seven of the said act are repealed and the following are substituted therefor:

"Acetic acid may only be sold under the name of acetic acid, and no manufacturer, vendor or other dealer in the same shall be permitted to sell or offer for sale acetic acid under the name of or as a substitute for vinegar.

"Every person who violates the provisions of the last preceding section shall incur a penalty of not less than two hundred dollars, and all acetic acid found on the premises wherein any such offence is committed shall be forfeited to the Crown and shall be seized by any officer of Inland Revenue and dealt with accordingly."

IS DEPORTED TO HOLLAND WHENCE HE CAME

London, England.—George Serlui, a former Winnipeg business man, who was arrested in Canada last November at the instance of his wife, on a charge of bigamy, and who returned to England on the same ship on which he had crossed with his second bride, serving a sentence in Liverpool after his arrival, has been deported to Holland.

The case was a sensational one. Miss Knaus, daughter of Alexander Knaus, a London millionaire, while on a visit to friends in New York, became engaged. Meeting Serlui later, she broke off her first engagement and on returning to England married Serlui, who represented himself as a widower. They left for a trip to Canada on the Empress of Britain, but Serlui's first wife was waiting at the dock and had him arrested. He was detained on the ship for return to England, while the deceived girl, through the good offices of a Canadian cabinet minister, to whom she applied for advice in her dilemma, also returned home on the same boat. On arrival in England, Serlui was tried on a charge of having previously entered the United Kingdom without a passport, and served a term in Liverpool. He is a native of Holland, and, having been deported from England some years ago, he went to Canada and returned here as a citizen of the Dominion. It is understood that with his deportation to Holland the bigamy charge has been dropped.

Editor's Note.—Mr. Serlui was formerly head of the Transoceanic Trading Co., with his headquarters in Winnipeg.

Vancouver (Special).—The British Columbia branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada have accepted the invitation of the Duncan branch to hold the provincial 1921 convention at Duncan, B.C.

Duncan is a delightful town of 1,200 people on the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, forty miles north of Victoria. It is said to enjoy the most equable climate of all Vancouver Island. Fishing in these waters is a matter of international fame. The surrounding territory tributary to Duncan boasts of mining, lumbering, farming and dairying as well as extensive fruit growing.

The convention will be held in August or September.

Never Ties Up Too Much Capital in Any One Line

"Our business turns over eighteen times a year," said J. W. Hanley, proprietor of the McLean Grocery, Moose Jaw, Sask., to an inquiry from Canadian Grocer.

"How do you do it?" he was asked.

"Our one big policy is to purchase goods in small quantities so that we can get the rapid turnover and not have very much tied up in any one particular line," was Mr. Hanley's answer. "For instance," said he, "if a salesman comes in to sell me some salad dressing, which is a comparatively slow line, and tells me that some merchant up the street has just ordered twenty-five cases, I will say, 'Alright, send me one case.' This means that we are always in a position to enlarge the number of lines we carry and at the same time not have our money tied up in one or two articles. We endeavor to judge the size of our purchases from the rapidity with which each article turns. An article like sugar, which is a rapid seller, we naturally buy more of than of some slow selling line. But on the whole we endeavor to turn our goods over one and a half times each month, and we feel that this is one of the best habits for a store to get into."

The McLean Grocery depends a great deal on window display for the introduction of new lines and the selling of old lines to their trade. The windows mean a lot to them and special attention is given to their displays.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE raw sugar market during the week under review has been quiet and firm. Sales of Porto Ricos were made at 5.02 cents c. & f. and full duty sugars at 3.75 cents, whcih works out on the parity of 4 cents for Cubas. Seven Cuban centrals have ceased working since our last issue, making a total of twelve since the 12th of the month, leaving 179 factories still working out of a total of 198 this season. Production of the twelve factories that have closed is 200,000 bags greater than last season. The Cuban crop this season has been heavy, and one million tons still remain in shipping ports. The passing of the Emergency Tariff Bill will increase Cuban sugars 60 cents per hundred.

Canadian refiners so far are firmly maintaining their prices but there appears to be considerable price cutting by whloesale houses and many resales are made from house to house. This state of affairs occasions great unrest and distrust and is looked upon with considerable disfavor by refiners who see no reason or justification for it. It is expected that the surplus supply or distressed parcels will soon be absorbed and thereafter with the improved demand that is expected to ensue, a healthier condition will prevail.

Dried fruits are strong on practically all lines. Prunes and apricots continue to hold a firm position under stimulus of European export business. Evaporated apples are higher. Currants are in a strong position with a more active demand.

Southern rices continue strong under an active inquiry and some of the dealers in the South are inclined to withhold stocks, apparently waiting higher prices. This activity in the primary markets is reflected on spot stocks and wholesalers report an improved movement to the retail trade.

The new crop of Japan teas has opened at 25 to 30 per cent. lower than last season. Ceylons and Indians are maintaining the strong tone that has been manifest for some time.

In wholesale circles business is showing a more stabilizing undertone with a steady flow of orders in a small way that are confined to immediate requirements. There are few price changes in grocery commodities but produce lines continue uncertain with prices very shaky. Butter and eggs, although holding fairly steady during the week, are nevertheless in an unsettled condition, and it is difficult to say with any degree of definiteness just what will materialize in the next few weeks. Hogs and hog products have weaker tendencies. Cheese is slightly firmer under stimulus of export business.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTEAL, May 25.—The grocery market stands fairly firm this week with a good movement of supplies in most lines. In some lines, while lower prices are quoted it is not a true indication of the condition of the market. Salmon is quoted lower, the different brands of sockeye are reduced but reports show that the catch of salmon is poor; the fishermen are on strike in some parts and there is every indication of a strong market. Rice shows an improvement with a stronger market and an advance in price. An improved demand will result in a rising market. Cucumbers, yellow, and Texas onions, are higher in price since the demand is greater than the supplies on hand. The dried fruit market is strong with higher prices quoted on dried apples. Raisins are scarce and higher prices are quoted. The same may be said of figs. It is expected that, with a scarcity of raisins, there will be a bigger call for currants with a stronger market in that line. Pineapples are in better supply with lower prices quoted, but lemons are advanced. Grapefruit is higher and is getting scarce. The nut market is strong with higher prices on shelled walnuts and on peanuts. The refiners' prices on sugar are unchanged and the market is steady but local wholesalers are cutting the price. There are further reductions on soaps. Tacks are lower.

Salmon Selling Lower

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS.—The principal feature of the canned goods market is the declining prices of salmon. These declines, the wholesalers state, are not warranted by the supply of salmon this year, but are the result of the general cut, and that as soon as the dealers are convinced of the true condition of the salmon market, prices will strengthen up again. Quotations on Cohoe salmon, Red Alaska, Clover Leaf and other grades of sockeye are reduced from 25 cents to 50 cents per case. Gallon preserved rhubarb is reduced to $5.75, a decline of 15 cents per dozen. Canned asparagus is advanced 40 cents per case.

Raisins Will Be Scarce

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS.—The dried fruit market is strong this week in nearly all lines. As one importer said, "It seems to be back to the pre-way days when it fluctuated a few cents every week, making it a very interesting market." Prices have started on an upward move with figs leading. Raisins are also very strong and scarce and it is expected that supplies will be short of the demand. Evaporated apples have advanced one cent and the dealers who have been cutting prices on this line have been forced to buy at the new price thus forcing their quotations up to the new level. Currants are unchanged, but it is thought that with raisins scarce there will be an increased demand for currants that will strengthen up that market.

Price Cutting Continues

Montreal.

SUGAR.—As far as the refiners' prices are concerned there is no change in the market, but cut prices still hold with a feeling among the wholesalers that the cutting may continue with still lower prices quoted to the retailer. The price stands now at $10.25, which is below the list price quoted by the refiners. There is a steady feeling as far as the general market is concerned.

Rice Future Improved

Montreal.

RICE.—Following a more active market for rice in the Southern States, local markets showed more strength than last week, with the result that prices quoted on primary markets advanced ¾ cent to 1 cent per pound. The rice market shows improved conditions and only the lack of demand on local markets is keeping down the price quoted by dealers. Importers state that as soon as confidence is established in the rice market and the demand shows improvement prices will immediately advance, as at present there is only a very small margin between prices on primary market and the wholesale quotations. One importer states that as soon as the rice market begins to advance it will take rapid strides towards higher levels.

Japan Teas Strong

Montreal.

TEAS.—Although the initial price on the new crop of Japan teas is 25 cents lower than prices quoted a year ago this price is still high and will likely hold closely to the opening quotations. Ceylon and Indian teas show more strength on the primary market, but the lack of demand locally counterbalances the strength of primary market while good supplies of the cheaper grades still flood this market.

Cucumbers Go Higher

Montreal.

VEGETABLES.—All the change this week on the vegetable market are advances. Cucumbers, in view of the big demand and a limited supply, have advanced to $9.00 per hamper. Yellow a Texas onions have advanced 50 and 75 cents per crate on account of the falling off of supplies. Fresh domestic vegetables are beginning to make their appearance on this market, but as yet supplies are not large enough to warrant any change in the prices. Radishes, lettuce and onions are the first on the market, but these come from local hothouses. Bigger supplies are expected shortly, with lower prices resulting.

Lemons Are Higher

Montreal.

FRUIT.—Higher prices are quoted on apples, lemons and grapefruit. The supply of apples is confined now to boxed stocks and with the limited supplies prices have advanced to $5.00. Lemons have been in big demand and prices have been forced up to $5.25 per crate. The grapefruit season is over and supplies are lower. Porto Ricos are quoted 75 cents higher, at $5.75 a case. Watermelons are in better supply and prices have declined 25 cents through the week. Oranges are in fair supply, but the market shows more strength, and an advance on California oranges would not be surprising. Prices on strawberries hold, with good supplies. Early this week larger shipments of pineapples arrived, with lower prices resulting. Six dollars per crate is quoted, and importers are making an effort to increase the demand.

Peanut Prices Up

Montreal.

NUTS.—The peanut market has started upward on account of the demand that comes with the summer months. Toasted jumbos are now selling at 15½ cents. Walnuts are strong and shelled walnuts have gone up this week to 68 cents a pound. Dealers state that when walnuts start upwards, almonds generally follow, and higher prices may be expected in these. Package Goods Unchanged

Borax is Reduced

Montreal.

MISCELLANEOUS.—A further 10 per cent. reduction is made on blue tacks. The 6 ounce is quoted at 52 cents, and four ounce at 30 cents. Tinned tacks are reduced 5 per cent, the four ounce selling at 44 cents and six ounce at 63 cents. Sisal rope is up one-half cent a pound and is quoted at 21 cents a pound. Following the general reductions in the price of soaps that have been made lately, other brands are reduced. Dingman's laundry soaps are reduced from 858 cents to $2.20 per case, according to brand, Lilac rose toilet soap is reduced $1.00 per case. Borax in bulk is reduced 6 cents per pound and local wholesalers are quoting it at 12 cents per pound.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 25.—The markets generally show few price changes. The situation appears to have a more stabilizing undertone with a tendency to less price cutting among wholesalers. This in part is attributed to the levying of the sales tax. Reductions are noted on kippered herrings, canned soups and one brand of pilchards. Dried fruits, rices, walnuts and almonds continue firm under a more active demand. Lemons are quoted higher but other fruits and vegetables are unchanged. New crop Japan teas are quoted lower than last year. Sugar refiners are firmly holding quotations but there still appears to be considerable price cutting among wholesalers.

Kippered Herrings Lower

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—Canned vegetables are unchanged and, in spite of the fact that fresh vegetables are arriving freely, there appears to be an active demand for all varieties. Fruits, however, continue in light demand at irregular quotations. Wallace's kippered herrings and herrings in tomato sauce are reduced to $1.90 per dozen. Pilchards are down to $1.80 per dozen. Cascade salmon, ones, are quoted at $1.45 per dozen and halves at $1 per dozen. Campbell's soups are now selling at $1.55 per dozen. Libby's marmalade 4s is offered at 75 cents each.

Rices Show Firmness

Toronto.

RICES.—Local wholesalers report an increased demand for rice the past week which is attributed to the firmness of the primary markets. A recent dispatch from the South on the rice situation says: "The outstanding feature of the rice situation is the scarcity of offerings and the firmness of the market. During the past week the apparent shortage of stocks on hand at the Southern mills has stiffened the market and as a result prices have jumped. In the better grades there is little to be had. Actual export orders are going begging for lack of supplies, which is a situation seldom seen on the markets these days. Buyers have become so accustomed to being granted concessions from quoted prices that they are not prepared for the resistance presented by a stiff market and so are not inclined to place much confidence in advanced prices and scarcity of stocks."

Sugar Prices Irregular

Toronto.

SUGAR.—There is nothing of special interest to report in Canadian refined sugar. Refiners' prices are firmly maintained but there appears to be considerable price cutting by wholesale houses and some resales from house to house have been made. This state of affairs occasions great distrust and is looked upon with considerable disfavor by refiners who see no reason or justification for it. It is expected, however, that the surplus or distressed parcels that are on the market will soon be absorbed. Then afterwards with the improved demand that is expected, a healthier condition will prevail.

WINNIPEG MARKETS

WINNIPEG, May 27.—The grocery market in general is steady with merchants buying only for immediate requirements. Canned pineapples have strengthened up as packers' stocks are practically exhausted. Rolled oats are showing a firmer tone. The coffee market is dull. The better grades of tea are meeting with a steady demand. The spice market is showing more activity, both black and white pepper showing a firmer tendency. Due to the scarcity of Jamaica ginger the market is firm. Prunes and apricots continue firm as foreign buyers are buying more of these lines. The nut market continues in a strong position. Rice is firmer. There is an active demand for fresh fruits and vegetables.

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS.—The canned goods market records no special developments, business being the same in character and volume as recently. The pineapple situation has strengthened up and surplus supplies have changed hands freely. Packers' stocks are practically exhausted.

Apricots Are Firm

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUITS.—Both prunes and apricots continue to maintain their recently acquired activity. Export inquiries for these lines are reported to have increased slightly and they are attributed to the recent betterment of foreign exchange which has enabled foreign buyers to secure more goods. However, the trade feels that it will be some time before buyers will be able to buy in large volume as there are still a number of problems to be settled in the foreign trade situation.

Foreign Trade of Germany Is On The Increase

The foreign trade of Germany, to which the London conference gave much attention in its discussions and plans, apparently amounted, says a statement by the National City Bank of New York, to nearly or perhaps quite $2,000,000,000 in the calendar year 1920, as against about $5,000,000,000 in the year prior to the war, though the ratio of "total values" of 1920 compared with those of 1913 does not, of course, indicate a corresponding ratio in quantity, since prices of 1920 were much higher than those of 1913.

This estimate of approximately $2,000,000,000 as the total foreign trade of Germany with 60,000,000 population in 1920, as against $5,000,000,000 with 67,000,000 population prior to the war, is necessarily based upon the trade figures of the countries buying from or selling to her, since her own trade figures at the present time are not only fragmentary, but stated in units of a depreciated and constantly fluctuating currency.

Is Selling Eggs by Weight a Good Plan?

J. M. Gibbs, Parkhill, Ont., Believes That if a Basis of Weight Was Generally Followed it Would Simplify Both Buying and Selling—Eggs for Export are Practically All Sold by Weight —How Produce Men View the Idea

"I WOULD like to see eggs sold by weight," stated J. T. Graham, manager of the grocery department of J. M. Gibbs, Parkhill, Ont. "It would certainly simplify both the buying and the selling. In buying all that would be necessary would be to weigh the basket or box of eggs and deduct the weight of the container and pay at the rate per pound."

Mr. Graham was counting out a basket of eggs that had just arrived from a customer in the country, when a Canadian Grocer representative was in the store, and to demonstrate his argument he picked out six eggs from the basket, placing them on the scale and they weighed one and one-half pounds. Picking another half dozen out from the same basket, these weighed nine ounces.

All Small Eggs at Times

"There is another reason for selling eggs by weight. Sometimes we receive a basket containing all small eggs," continued Mr. Graham. "We also have some customers who bring us all large ones, claiming they keep the small ones at home for their own use. The difference in the size of the eggs is a matter of the variety of hens kept by the farmer, some chickens producing large eggs and other kinds small ones.

"Another side, too, in favor of buying and selling eggs by weight lies in the fact that a customer very often brings a basket of eggs, and says there are so many dozen, but upon counting them out we find that the count is short. We cannot argue with a customer, so in consequence we must pay them for the number that they say is in the basket or otherwise take the chance of losing a customer. With weighing, there is no possible chance of errors or over paying of this nature."

"What about the time? Don't you think it would take longer to weigh the eggs every time a customer purchased them than by the present method of counting them into the bag?" asked Canadian Grocer.

"There would be practically no difference," replied Mr. Graham. "In fact I believe it would not take as long. But the main point to my mind is that there would be no picking and choosing all the large eggs by the customers when buying. Every person would get a square deal and eggs, no matter what the size, would be worth an equal value."

This argument opens up an interesting subject and one that spasmodically has been up for discussion by various merchants. There are some merchants, however, who do not believe it is a good plan to sell eggs by weight, believing that the present plan cannot be improved, and to change it would only add another difficulty to the grocer's burden.

Eggs for Export Sold by Weight

"I cannot see where there would be any benefit in buying and selling eggs by weight," stated James T. Madden, secretary of the Canadian Produce Association, Toronto. "At the present time eggs for export are practically sold by weight, as every case graded number one must contain not less than 47 pounds net, and also to be of a certain standard in regard to condition and appearance of the shell. They must be clean. The size of the egg is not the most important thing. Take in the early spring, the most important point from the consumer's side is whether they are fresh, and they will buy a small egg in preference to the large one, if the smaller is the fresher. Then during the early spring months, when the pullets commence to lay, the eggs are always small. I have seen large eggs that would not weigh as much as a smaller one, simply because that big egg had a large air space at one end and the contents were thin and watery. What we do need is strict laws in regard to grading for quality and some method to get eggs quicker from the producer — that is gathered carefully every day and not held in farmers' homes, where they are subject to various changes of temperature."

Has Its Disadvantages

"Handling eggs by weight no doubt would have its advantages, but I am afraid that the disadvantages would outweigh the advantages," stated C. A. Mann, of C. A. Mann & Co., London, Ont. "I believe eggs should be sold retail by weight, or at least could be sold retail to advantage, but in a wholesale way it would be very hard to do so as you know eggs are handled on a very small margin, and I cannot figure how the dealers could pay by weight. It would necessitate transferring each shipment, whereas at the present time this is not done. It might be quite possible for the retailer as he has the advantage of paying according to what they get."

Believes the Time Will Come

"We are quite in sympathy with the idea of selling eggs by weight and believe it the proper method," stated H. S. Sims, manager produce department of Gunns, Ltd., Toronto. "This matter has been taken up at various meetings of the Produce Association, but up to date nothing has been done in that direction. This matter has come up time and time again and always ends in the same old way of selling by the dozen, and we cannot see, just at the present time, what we can do to get away from this. We believe the time will come when eggs will be sold by weight, but that time is not the near future."

Like to See It Tried

"We are inclined to agree with the merchants who are in favor of selling eggs by weight," stated W. G. Jackson, manager of produce department, Harris Abattoir Co., Ltd., Toronto. "It certainly would be preferable to buy eggs by weight if it can be worked out on a practical basis. I have often wished that this method be given a trial."

The Idea Is Feasible

"It is feasible to sell eggs by weight,"

said Mr. White, 2935 Granville Street, Vancouver, B.C. "I don't know whether a poultry man can produce more small eggs than big ones from the same quantity of poultry food, but it would seem logical that he could. The way eggs are sold now it puts a premium on the production of small eggs. A poultry man would gain by killing off the hens laying large eggs and eating large meals.

"At the present time," continued Mr. White, "I am getting 5 cents a dozen higher than the market on eggs, but if you look again you will see that my eggs are unusually large." It was a fact. "I have these eggs specially chosen for me by the wholesaler that supplies me. They are extra selected eggs. They give excellent satisfaction and I get what they are worth."

Another article giving views of merchants and produce men on the subject of handling eggs by weight will appear in an early issue. Canadian Grocer will be glad to hear from readers on this subject.

Methods of Caring For Cheese And Milk to Keep Them Fresh

Ideas in This Regard That Are Being Followed By C. Pike, 3rd Avenue and St. Stephens Street, Vancouver—Also Offers 5 Per Cent. Discount For Cash and Carry

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, May 25.—C. Pike, 3rd Avenue at Stephens Street, Vancouver, always keeps his split cheese in original condition. Here is how it is done:

"When a grocer splits a cheese," says Mr. Pike, "he naturally exposes the new surface to the air, which in time hardens the cheese and impairs its condition. I have found that the nearest approach I can make to the manner in which a cheese is sealed when it leaves the factory is as follows:

"Rub the face of the cheese over with lard, leaving a thin film over the new face of the cheese. Now take a waxed paper wrapper from a corn flakes box, open it out and flatten it on to the cheese, trimming off the edges. You will find that in this way your cheese will be kept in original condition until the last pound is sold. When you split your next cheese, treat both halves like this and you will be well pleased, as I was, at the improved keeping qualities. When cutting up a cheese in the machine I always cover one surface like I do the face of it, and put a piece of waxed paper on the fresh surface exposed at each cutting.

Milk Is Kept Fresh

"More especially during the warm weather, whether you have an ice chest or not, you will find the following helpful in keeping your bottled milk in good condition. When you put your fresh milk away, pour into the top of each bottle a couple of tablespoonfuls of water. This will lie on top of the paper cap, keeping it moist. When moist the cap fits tight on to the bottle and keeps your milk protected by a hermetic seal, as is intended."

Mr. Pike does a large business by telephone and also seems to have a large trade with children. A kindly, patient manner with children and you've gone a long way towards influencing the neighborhood trade to "Pike's Good Grocery."

Discount for Cash

It is of interest to note in connection with Pike's grocery that a 5 per cent. discount is given for cash and carry. As stated in Mr. Pike's "Reminder," a card listing all groceries, which is perforated to hang near the phone: "Five cents on the dollar (5 per cent.) off every purchase of a dollar's worth, or over, if paid for and taken away at one time."

One other phrase on the card caught Canadian Grocer's attention: "I like dogs, but I like them best outside, because they are poor judges of groceries inside."

Mr. Pike recently contributed an interesting article to Canadian Grocer on "Taxation," to which subject Mr. Pike has given a great deal of study.

Hangs Thermometer Outside His Store

A summer idea that created sales in soft drinks was carried out by a grocer in an Alberta town last year and it proved effective in its originality. This grocer hung a large thermometer outside his store. When a hot spell was anticipated or prevailing, the weather forecasts being received from the daily weather reports, he had a large red arrow pointed to, say, 98 to 100.

The sign would read:—

"When the thermometer reaches this point we will sell ginger ale at $2 per case. A glass of sparkling ginger ale will refresh you."

In the winter months the merchant used the same idea to sell soups.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 25.—There is a steadier feeling throughout the produce market except on hogs and cheese. Prices on eggs and butter are unchanged with a firmer tone and a good demand for supplies. The export market for butter shows improvement which tends to strengthen up prices. The supply of eggs is plentiful but the consumption and demand shows a marked increase. The cheese market is weak with a drop in prices, principally on account of the lack of activity in the export market. New cheese is now selling at 19 cents a pound wholesale. Hogs are lower in price, having dropped one cent a pound. Dressed pork is also lower in price but smoked and cooked meats have been steady under a good demand. Smoked meats, however, seem to have a weaker tendency, and dealers are looking for easier prices. There is no change in fish prices and the supply is sufficient to meet the demands except in fresh lake fish.

Fish Prices Steady

Montreal.

FRESH FISH.—There is no change in the fish market this week. The supply of halibut, cod and haddock arriving is good but the supply of lake fish shows little improvement. Prices are steady with a good seasonable demand.

Montreal.

CHEESE.—There has been a sudden drop in the wholesale price of new cheese. Quotations are now generally 19 cents per pound with still a weak tendency. The receipts of cheese are large, being almost double that of the same week last year. The trend of the cheese market largely depends upon the export market and that at the present time is quiet.

Montreal.

BUTTER.—Although the receipts of butter showed a marked increase last week over the previous week the market has shown signs of strength with a keener demand for supplies and a firmer feeling throughout. The wholesale price, however, is unchanged this week but the tendency is for a slight advance in price. The export market also shows more activity which lends strength to local markets.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 25.—Butter and cheese are showing a steadier tone, although it can not be stated with definiteness what will materialize in the next few weeks. Margarine is again reduced under a limited demand. Lard is quoted lower but shortening is unchanged. The egg market continues easy under heavy production and large stocks. Cooked meats, smoked and barrel meats are lower. Live hogs are down and fresh pork cuts are also reduced. Poultry is arriving more freely under lower prices.

Butter Prices Steadier

Toronto.

BUTTER.—Under stimulus of export business the market has developed a slightly steadier tone. Whether this condition will be maintained is difficult to say with any degree of definiteness as the production is steadily increasing and dealers are not showing any great inclination to store. Quotations are more regular and steady at 29 to 30 cents for the best creamery grades.

Recognized as Balanced Ration

Ice Cream Contains Fats and Sweets in Very Nourishing Proportions—Is Helping to Bring Down High Cost of Living.

WHEN ice cream first began to be popular, it was served as the finish to a full meal. Later, frozen good things were served with courses, and it was discovered that creams, sherbets and water ices possessed undoubted food value.

From time to time, the public reads in newspaper advertising or hears by word of mouth that ice cream is all nourishment, being composed of milk, cream, eggs, sugar, fruits or fruit juices, flavoring, nuts, and similar ingredients, but it has never realized the full extent of the nutritive value of the frozen dessert.

Many workers find that they can do a better afternoon of work if they do not eat too heartily at noon, and a repast consisting of perhaps a sandwich, a cup of coffee and a dish of ice cream furnishes ample in the way of food value, without retarding the brain processes.

Other people have helped readjust the cost of living by cutting out the expensive noon meal which cost anywhere from one to two dollars, and substituting a quickly served luncheon procured in a quarter of the time, and at an expense of forty or fifty cents, with ample nourishment. It has been shown that ice cream made of 8 per cent. or 10 per cent. butter fat is an ideal food for the nursing mother, for the reason that the materials contained in the ice cream can be changed into the ideal food for the child, with the least possible expenditure of energy.

The food value of candy is also more than is generally realized. The United States Department of Agriculture shows that an individual employed in active labor will require about 3,400 calories or heat units per day. 52.91 per cent. of these should be carbohydrates or sweets; 9.41 per cent. of proteins (such food as meat, beans, cheese, or the curd of milk); 20.59 per cent. of fats, and the balance 17.09 per cent. of ash, mineral salts, etc.

Some of the higher grade candies are composed of sugar, cream or milk, with sometimes the addition of fruit or nuts. Such candies have been analyzed and a number of them found to average 56.12 per cent. of carbohydrates or sugars; 12.41 per cent. of proteins; 26.67 per cent. of fats; and the balance water, ash, etc.—The Soda Fountain.

Retail Grocer, Writing to Canadian Grocer, Declares That the Retailers' Only Protection Lies With Such Measures as the Wholesale Grocers' Association Can Give Them

CANADIAN GROCER has received the following letter from a subscriber, and, bearing on the relation of the wholesaler to the retailer, will be found of interest:

Editor, Canadian Grocer:

The hearing of the alleged combine against the wholesale grocers and their association no doubt has been keenly followed by all members of the retail trade. This is a matter of vital importance to all of us, for as I see it the retailers are not efficiently organized and our only protection lies with such measures as the Wholesale Grocers' Association can give us.

This charge brought by Mr. Raney, the Attorney-General, should it be upheld, would put the grocery business away back where it was years ago, and badly disjoint the well-defined and only safe form of distribution — that which is in use to-day. The only possible form of distribution that can be carried on sanely and safely to the best interests of all is through the existing channels of trade, and had it not been for the untiring energy of the Wholesale Grocers' Association such would not be the case to-day.

Are Not Profiteers

Wholesalers and retailers are not profiteers—never were and never will be—so why try to eliminate either of them. In the case of the U.F.O. Co-operative Society as I see it they simply take the profit from the wholesaler and retailer and divide it between the head office and the club. The president or secretary—sometimes both—get a percentage on all transactions and the head office gets their rake-off. The result is we retailers can almost always undersell them, and when we don't it is just a matter of an insignificant amount. Any shipment of goods to the U.F.O. that I have seen could have been purchased through me just as cheaply and would have given me a nice little profit, too.

A Parallel Case in U.S.A.

Now then if the grocers lose their case, where will we retailers, both in the country and city be? It seems to me that little societies would spring up all over and eventually we retailers in the country could sell an odd plug of tobacco, a lamp glass or a straw hat or shoe lace and the things worth while would be purchased through the numerous societies. If we look across the line, though, we may get a little consolation for a similar case was tried before the United States court some years ago and the decision was in favor of the wholesalers and manufacturers, maintaining that the manufacturer had the right to set the retail price and also to sell to whom he pleased.

Mail Order Competition

There is one other question I would like to mention, which is of great importance to retailers, especially situated in the country who come within the scope of the mail order houses and city department stores. Many manufacturers sell to the big fellow at jobber's prices. The result is when he adds his profit, his selling price is just enough below us to make it impossible for us to meet his price, considering high transportation costs. I see write-ups, and hear men say, "Oh, the mail order house doesn't bother me," "Our business never was better and we can hold our local trade and compete successfully." To this all I can say is that this man isn't familiar with the amount of express or parcel post coming to his town every day. It is only reasonable that if the big fellow can buy cheaper than us, he can sell cheaper, and on many lines he is landing certain lines of merchandise in right under our noses simply because we cannot compete. Why?

Put All on Equal Footing

Simply because the big fellow can buy in larger quantities and gets the benefit of quantity price. We can beat him—hands down—on lines where he isn't so favored, but why try to make ourselves believe we can beat his price when we know we can't and know why? Let the manufacturer put us all on an equal footing, for we small retailers sell more of any well-known product than do the big fellows and if the manufacturer had to depend on the big fellows for his living he would starve to death. Let the manufacturer be fair with us. We can't buy carloads of soap or rolled oats or flour, so it is up to him to give us a price that will allow us to be able to compete with the fellow who can.

As a warning to manufacturers there is one thing I will venture to say: when we get properly organized, as we eventually will, we will then deal with them through an organization that will bring the necessary facts to bear upon them, and not until then can we expect to get the consideration we deserve. Individually we are small; collectively we are large, so it is evident we must speak through our associations.

Sends Summer Resorters Calendars

One way to get summer resort trade and business from summer residents, and one that has been followed with a good deal of success by a grocer in the Lake of Bays district. In the annual distribution of calendars he includes the owners of cottagers and proprietors of hotels and boarding houses in the vicinity. These serve to remind the summer residents that this grocer is still carrying on business.

Let's Be Reasonable

Does any reader of this page believe that at this time a readjustment of wages and hours in the printing industry involving an increase in labor costs of 36 per cent. is justified?

"Well," the reader asks, "What are present wages and hours?"

Toronto printers now have a minimum wage scale of $35.20 per week for 48 hours. This is an increase of 10 per cent. over the scale called for in the agreement now expiring and was granted voluntarily by employers a year ago.

Their demands now are for a wage of $44 per week for 44 hours.

This is an increase of $8.80 per week for four hours less work.

It means an increase in labor costs of 36 per cent.

Toronto employing printers feel that they cannot grant these demands, and they believe that the general public will support them in their opposition to an increase of from 73c per hour to $1.00 per hour to printers, pressmen, bookbinders, and mailers, at the present time and in view of business conditions as they now exist.

It is understood that International Union officials at Indianapolis have issued orders to local unions that the 44-hour week must be the basis of all new agreements.

In this order, employing printers believe that these Indianapolis officials are out of line with the need which is apparent in every industry for lower cost of production.

This is not a time for saddling any industry with an additional 36 per cent. labor cost, and publishers and job printers feel that they are justified—in the interest of the public—in resisting this unreasonable demand from Indianapolis.

The issue will be decided between now and June 1st. If the union demands of an increased wage of $8.80 per week for 4 hours' less service are not withdrawn, a strike seems inevitable.

Pressure, therefore, must be brought to bear upon the officials at Indianapolis. They must be shown by members of the local union (many of whom feel that they are being forced to make unreasonable demands) that the Canadian public which buys the product of the printing craft, either in the form of advertising or subscription, does not look with favor upon any ruling which would add so heavily to the cost of that product.

Publishers and job printers in Toronto want to be fair. This is indicated by their action in voluntarily raising wages a year ago.

They must, however, in justice to themselves and the public they serve resist these impossible demands.

Let's Be Reasonable

An expression of opinion of readers of this paper on the Union's proposals, involving an increase of 36% in the labor cost of printed matter, is asked. Will you not write a letter (not for publication) telling him your view of the situation?

This statement is published by and has received the endorsation of the Toronto publishers who are members of the

COCOANUT MARKET LOOKS FIRMER

John Clarke & Co., New York, in their weekly market letter discuss desiccated cocoanut as follows: "The spot market for Ceylon cocoanut during the past week has been firm; macaroon is slightly higher, medium shred is firm and the fancy cuts are at about the same level as the preceding week. Stocks are small here and the demand has been fairly steady for small quantities.. Nearby afloat parcels are not large and have been pretty well cleaned up. Quotations for future shipment are little changed from last week. Buyers' ideas are lower than sellers' and while some business has been put through the total is small."

This makes clerks more efficient because:

1. Each clerk is responsible for the business he handles.
2. In case of error it shows who made the mistake.
3. It gives each clerk credit for the work he does.

ALWAYS IN DEMAND

But doubly so at this season

YOU should be able to sell a good Floor Mop such as this to fully half the women who enter your store this month.

Even those who have one may feel they should get better house-cleaning results with a new one.

To those who have not yet experienced the satisfaction of using the O-Cedar Polish Mop, point out how well it is made—the fine grade of cotton yarn and drill used—how strongly it is sewn.

But, above all, explain that it is treated with O-Cedar Polish—that is the outstanding reason for its unique success in changing dull, lifeless floors to bright, sparkling, mirror-like surfaces.

O-Cedar Products are readily recognized as "good value." They are sold at reasonable prices—and the customer cheerfully pays the full sales price which we ask our dealers to quote.

Order a good supply and feature them in your window. A good "camper's necessities" window, including plenty of BORDEN'S ST. CHARLES MILK, REINDEER COFFEE AND COCOA, has brought excellent returns to many Canadian grocers. Try one —it will do the same for you.

The Prestige of Cascade

You have sold this salmon of uniform quality for several years. Your customers ask for it by name, so what's the use of dickering with off brands? Insist upon "Cascade" and turn your money over quickly. Here is another delightful recipe:

SALMON—AND PEA—SALAD

Prepare 1 quart of aspic jelly(made with gelatine after the regulation recipe), half fill a mold with it and allow to set; arrange in it 1 can of minced Cascade Salmon (drained and with skin and bones removed), pour over it a little more of the liquid jelly which has been kept in a warm place, add a few slices of hard-boiled eggs; let set again until it stiffens, then pour over all the remainder of the quart of liquid jelly. Set in a cold place; when ready to serve, turn out and decorate with cold boiled peas (or canned peas which have been washed in cold water and drained). Serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Recommend this dish to every lady customer, and fill a window with Cascade. Sell it by the dozen. Some Ontario merchants are selling five cases in one week, and so can you.

The "Cascade" label is your guarantee.

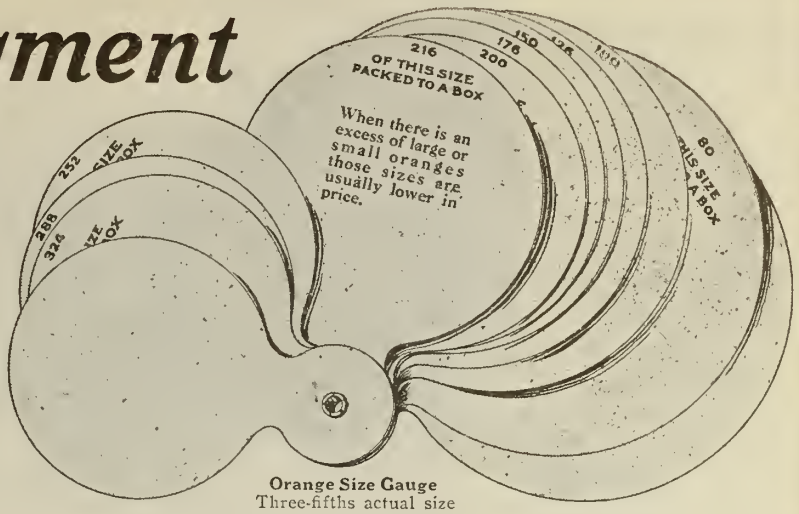
Your Judgment

Mr. Grocer—and this handy gauge go well together

When You Buy

Your Oranges and Lemons



Orange Size Gauge
Three-fifths actual size
Actual size of each "count" is shown in gauge, with brief description of use for which best adapted. Lemon Size Gauge is similar.

THERE'S a wise way to buy oranges and lemons, and yet it's a simple way: "Always shop for odd sizes."

Smaller or larger sizes of lemons and oranges are likely to go at bargain prices when there's an excess in the market.

And they're as eatable and juicy as the "popular" or medium sizes for which you pay a premium. So why not look for the "odd sizes"?

We'll send you two size gauges—one for lemons, another for oranges—to help you buy for real profit. They're free. Just ask the C. F. G. E.—today.

This is just one way we help grocers who "ask the C. F. G. E." And there are many other ways, as well.

How We Help You—

FOR instance, we send men from town to town every month to help retailers make profit-winning fruit displays in their windows. Such displays are the life of a fruit business.

Aren't you going to dress up your store with some real business-getting orange displays? Write for our free sets of Sunkist cards, "strings" and banners for your counters and windows. They have been made, after careful study, to meet your needs.

Or maybe you are thinking of advertising in local papers or neighborhood movies. We'll gladly send you free "cuts"—for use on price-lists and letter-heads—or free Sunkist lantern-slides with your name in strong colors.

—Ask the C. F. G. E.

WRITE us your problems. Maybe we can help solve them. We've an experienced retail man whose job is to give you the benefit of his thirty-six years behind the counter. His name is Paul Findlay. Hundreds of grocers welcome his brass-tacks talks.

The C. F. G. E. is a co-operative agency. Years ago it was formed by thousands of California orange and lemon growers to sell their fruit at actual cost. It has placed the orange and lemon business on a sound merchandising basis. And now a fraction of a penny per dozen is given by these growers to establish a fund for helping merchants handle these fruits at a safe profit. Wise business co-operation—nothing else.

Anybody who sells California oranges and lemons is entitled to our help. Last year more than 10,000 retailers asked for our services; and they profited. Were you one of them?

MACDONALD'S

Secrets of Successful Selling

Many volumes have been written—thousands of epigrams composed—on this subject. Yet, when all is said and done, it simply amounts to this:—

Selling goods that will satisfy the customer.

Selling goods that will pay you a worthwhile profit.

Because Macdonald's Tobaccos answer both these requirements, successful retailers all over Canada are selling more Macdonald's than any other tobacco.

Three sources of profit repay your efforts in pushing Macdonald's Tobaccos—the always-generous profit-margin — the extra profit in the four to six plugs over-run in every 10-lb. caddy—and the fast Macdonald turnover which multiplies the earning power of your capital.

New Ways Have Come for Good!

You probably wonder as you look over your modern shop how you were able to do business as well as you did in the old way. Remember the dismal store and the jumble of things, boxes and barrels, crackers and fish. Never could get them to look like anything. Then a great light broke somewhere. Somebody had a brilliant idea. Why not put all these things in packages? Opposition! Why people fought it tooth and nail, but now that's all gone by the boards.

Nowadays it's "Give me a package of"—well, oh, nearly everything in the store. Clean, nice business, no loss in weight, no complaint of quality, no—by the way, some merchants, a good many in fact, still sell tea in bulk, the very article of all others that loses strength and flavor when open, the thing that is the hardest to judge of quality and the thing that brings more complaints than any other. Hard to let go of old habits, but isn't this selling of bulk tea only one of the relics of the past?

Isn't it time to change? Never a better time than right now. The Red Rose Tea traveller has a lot of good ideas that will help you increase your tea business.

Claims Losses Have Been Profitable

Montreal Grocer Points Out That in Taking Losses Because of Declining Markets, He Has Really Made Good Business for Himself and in the End Profit Will Be Worth While—Failing to Mark Down Prices Creates Mistrust on the Part of the Public.

By Staff Correspondent of Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL, May 31.—In comparing the prices quoted recently by a number of retail grocers in this city on some of the staple grocery lines a Canadian Grocer representative found a surprisingly wide diversion of prices even on branded package lines and canned goods. In some cases the reason lies in the fact that the overhead expenses were higher than in others, and therefore the merchant had to ask a higher price than his competitor was asking. In perhaps one other case the locality in which the store was situated warranted a higher price being asked, however just the principle involved. In the majority of instances, however, it was purely a matter of market conditions and buying, in other words poor merchandising.

It Is Poor Business

When the question was brought to the attention of one of the grocers who was asking a price for a staple line 50 per cent. higher than that quoted by two other grocers in the same locality this merchant said: "When I bought the goods I paid a much higher price than the present market value. I am only asking a fair margin of profit on the actual cost and when I have unloaded this stock I will adjust my prices to the new price I will have to pay for the goods. I am not here to lose money and no matter how the market goes I must at least get my cost out of the goods I have in stock."

Short Sightedness

Not only did this merchant fail to see the short sightedness of his policy but he resented the matter being brought to his attention. He could not see that his present policy was losing him more money in loss of business than he could possibly lose if he sold out the complete line below cost. It might be that the public is somewhat at fault in paying the high price, when they know very well that it can be bought cheaper. Nevertheless there is a majority among every grocer's patrons who watch carefully the prices asked for different lines and whose trade is worthy of the grocer's nurturing. It only takes a little time for the people to find out that they are paying a needless price, and they will go elsewhere. It will cost the grocer far more to get back his custom than to take a small loss now and hold the trade for the future.

Adjustments Must Come

Some grocers have quickly taken their loss and adopted the policy of following the market, and so placing their business on a fresh and more healthy basis. The manager of one of the stores that has adopted this principle said to a Canadian Grocer representative: "I figured out the loss that I would have to take to clean out my stock which was bought at the peak of the market and came to the conclusion that it was far better to take the loss immediately than to lose the trade that myself and others have been working years to build. There is no other safe solution to the question. The merchant who is not adjusting his prices to the new market values is losing business. Even the so-called people of means are to-day carefully watching the trend of prices. We see this every day in the response we get to our advertised list of prices. It takes only a little time for the people to find out that they are paying higher prices for goods in one store than another and they soon change their places of dealing. The grocer has then not only lost his customer, but the goods which he is endeavoring to unload, without a loss, are left on his shelves and there is no profit on anything until it is sold. He is doubly the loser whereas the man who has taken the initial loss is attracting custom, his turnover is increased, he has no worry about old stock and he has the satisfaction of seeing his business away to a fresh start without any handicap. In fact he has a big advantage on the buying market over his competitor who cannot buy on the lower market.

A Steady Business

"Personally I would far rather take a smaller profit if in doing so I can realize a bigger turnover. My stock is cleared out quicker. I have every advantage that is offered to the merchant who can buy quickly with cash and I am not fooling myself by imagining that I have such a value of stock on my shelves when try as I may I cannot realize more than 60 per cent. of the amount in selling. My strong recommendation to any grocer who is worried by the declining market is to take the loss now and start over with the assurance that there is good steady business ahead at the lower prices with freer buying on the part of the public."

Making a Loss Pay

This grocer went on to show how he made a loss pay. "The first to understand the situation and take the loss were those who lose the least in the long run," he said. "In my case I advertised lower prices. For instance, I realized that my task was not to sell out at a price but was to sell out quickly. I offered lower prices and advertised them as such but instead of making the price per article I set the price at so much per half dozen or on two or three of each line. For instance, ten pounds of tea at such a price, three pounds of currants at such a price or six tins of canned goods at such a price. The result was that very soon I had cleared out the old stock and was on the market to buy at the lower prices. It gave me a good start. The people are quick to recognize fairness on the part of the merchant and it wins good-will and a reputation which later is of far more value than the whole of the old stock which was sacrificed. It certainly paid to take

Ice Cream Means of Holding Trade

Niagara Peninsula Merchant Says That Ice Cream Helps to Keep Up the Volume of Turnover and Fills the Place Caused by Reduced Buying on Other Articles—Sells 2,200 Gallons of Ice Cream Over the Counter During the Summer Season.

"THE profit on general groceries is so small that I consider it almost necessary to put in some line that shows a good profit and push it for all it is worth," stated M. Pickard, of Pickard & Son, St. Catharines, Ont., to Canadian Grocer. "That is one of the many reasons why I decided to put in ice cream. Another reason is that ice cream has practically become a national pastime. People do not buy ice cream because it is a food, but they buy it more in the form of an amusement. Young people walking around filling in the time, or who have a friend they wish to entertain for an hour or two, drop into an ice cream parlor for a comfortable conversation and at the same time have a little refresment."

The selling of ice cream in grocery stores is becoming more and more an established feature, and according to those merchants who have made a success of this line there is no better opportunity to launch an ice cream department than at the present, particularly as people have to a certain extent curtailed buying. That at least is the way in which Pickard & Son reason the situation. They have been selling ice cream for the past three seasons and sales last year ran into 2,200 gallons over the counter, which does not include the hundreds of gallons that were sold to church affairs, garden parties and picnics.

"During these times of reduced buying, it is necessary for the retail grocer to have articles that are different," said Mr. Pickard, "and I know of no better line to push than ice cream. It is the most profitable article we sell. Of course there is a lot of detail and work in connection with it, but the margin of profit justifies the extra work."

Pickard & Son have the ice cream department located at the rear of the store and as the store is situated on a corner there is a street and a window, besides a connecting door between the grocery and ice cream departments. This layout is admirable as customers entering the ice cream room from the street can survey the grocery department. It draws attention to that department. Customers after finishing their purchase of ice cream often make their exit through the grocery department, which ultimately leads to a better acquaintance and permanent customers.

The ice cream department is equipped with soda fountain and accessories, also tables and chairs. A fairly lengthy menu is provided but Mr. Pickard does not believe in having too long a list as often on busy days extra help must necessarily be hired to handle the business which would entail training in making up the dishes and serving.

Ice Cream Helps Sale of Other Lines

The selling of ice cream, however, does not stop at that sale, but is used as a suggestion and a stimulant to the sale of other lines. For instance, Mr. Pickard dresses his sundaes with preserved pineapple which they buy in gallon cans. It occurred to Mr. Pickard that this pineapple when made up as a preserve was equally as good as the preserve made from the fresh pineapple. He therefore made up a can and put it in pint sealers. This was demonstrated to the customers, pointing out that by using this pineapple they would save the troublesome work of preparing the fresh fruit and at the same time prove more economical. So far this season this idea has resulted in the sale of 40 cases or 240 tins and many customers who at first just purchased one tin came back for a larger supply.

In the ice cream department there is a case displaying candy in bulk and boxed chocolates, also another case containing cigars and cigarettes. Sales on these lines are steadily increasing. Young men when treating their best girl to refreshment have a habit of buying a box of chocolates when leaving and men customers who purchase their tobacco supply from the Pickard store frequently pause at the soda fountain for liquid refreshment. Thus it is seen that the selling of ice cream has a double purpose and readily forms a suggestion by which the daily volume of business is greatly enhanced.

"Reducing Prices Has Brought About a Normal Movement"

Manager of the Grocery Department of Hudson's Bay Stores in Vancouver Believes That Taking Losses as Quickly as Possible the Best

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, B.C., May 31 (Special).—Mr. Richdale, manager of the grocery department, Hudson's Bay stores, Vancouver, in discussing the progress of their return to normal, says:

"We have absolutely priced all jams, marmalades, in fact, conserves of all kinds, at replacement values. We are enjoying a normal movement at these reduced prices. I am convinced that an almost normal trade can be done almost anywhere if the people's expectation of lower prices are met. It is good business to take the losses. The first losses are the best in this case. The immediate loss may be very painful but business is a lot healthier for the operation."

Mr. Richdale says in regard to self serve:

"I find that the majority of our customers are better pleased to receive the usual service that a grocer has been used to giving, and are quite prepared to pay a fair margin for this service.

"I think that with production costs and selling prices getting into their proper relationships again that the slight difference possible between a service and a non-service store will not seem to repay the housewife for the extra trouble involved in carrying home her purchases."

In the Hudson's Bay stores a healthy interest is being shown in general grocery lines. Fine spring weather is helping. Windows are dressed freshly each week with fancy and seasonable lines. One of the large display windows is set aside for groceries each week and others on special occasions.

The Grocer's Windows

A representative of Canadian Grocer asked Mr. Richdale if a grocer section could use expensive window space as advantageously as the other departments where the merchandise carried a larger percentage of profit.

Mr. Richdale stated that while the sales from a grocery window will not show as large a profit as those of other lines, the sales from good window displays of groceries justify the use of even the most valuable window.

"Keep a grocery window looking like a grocery window," says Mr. Richdale. "Art—yes. Display—surely; prices—always—but make it quite distinctively an indication of a grocery store."

A great deal of interest was shown in a recent window entitled "Bread — the Staff of Life." An unusual perspective was achieved — the prairie distances being very realistic.

Many Motorists Will Pass Along These Roads As Outlined on This Map—Your Store Is Within Easy Reach If Not Along the Route—It Is a Good Opportunity to Sell.

"Sell the Motorist Passing Your Way"

Army of Tourists Will Invade Canada This Summer—The Grocer's Opportunity to Sell Many Lines That Will Appeal to Parties Travelling Through the Country by Motor — Many Grocers Selling Gasoline

FROM information secured by Canadian Grocer from various organizations in Canada, there has been a much greater number of inquiries received from prospective tourists from the United States and Canada during the spring months than at any time in the past. These inquiries have been for information concerning roads and touring conditions in Canada, and are from motor owners who contemplate visiting this country during the coming summer months. The exchange situation is undoubtedly a factor in encouraging United States tourists to spend their holidays touring Canada, for their money carries a greater buying power in this country than do Canadian funds. Many inquiries are also being received at certain points in Canada from Canadians residing at some distance, who are evidently contemplating taking the road for their holidays this season.

200,000 Cars Will Enter Ontario

It is estimated by the Ontario Motor League that during the present season some two hundred thousand cars will enter Ontario alone from the United States. This means between eight hundred thousand and one million tourists. If the average tourist spends five days in the province and spends ten dollars per day upon car maintenance, for instance, the amount of United States money brought into this province alone will be in the neighborhood of forty million dollars.

That money spent on improving Canada's highways is not lost, but is rather a good investment by encouraging tourist travel is evident from the figures above.

Grocers Selling Gasoline

Just in this likelihood of much automobile travelling alone is there a great opportunity for the grocer. A great many grocers throughout the country have in the past few years added gasoline to the list of lines they carry, and in the summer months particularly have found it very profitable. Having a tank for the supplying of passing motorists with gasoline is enterprise worth while, and the experience of more than one grocer, who has added gasoline to his stock, has been that the sale of it has meant the sale of other goods. In the next few months the motorist and party passing up and down the country will stop at many grocery stores. He is more likely to stop at the one, too, that has gasoline, and the average merchant that can carry it this summer, Canadian Grocer believes, will find it profitable and well worth while, judging from the experience of grocers who have already made a success of it. Certain automobile accessories, too, can be sold from the grocery store, and the addition of them to the regular stock will provide a convenience and service to the motorist that will not only mean increased sales, but will be appreciated by the motoring public.

The army of tourists who are expected to visit Canada during this summer constitute a great potential factor in trade in many grocery lines. People on holiday bent buy many things to which at other times they would give some consideration before purchasing. Specialties in the grocery trade sell well to the holiday motorist. It is the grocer's opportunity to boost sales of these lines during the summer months, and the automobile party constitutes as good a buying public as can be obtained.

Thirsty and hot the party at once seeks out a place to purchase ice cream and soft drinks. Very frequently in small places through the country there is no regularly constituted ice cream parlor, and here the grocer should take advantage of the circumstance to add soft drinks and ice cream. Serving the motorist alone will provide a gratifying remuneration, apart altogether from the business he secures in his own little community. Lines such as these are also "trade catchers," meaning, of course, that they help the sale of other groceries. Getting them into the store to buy those things that they most desire, the grocer can very often sell them other edibles.

Confectionery Will Sell Well

Confectionery in the way of boxed candy and of a good quality will sell well, and a good display of the same will do a great deal to increase sales. Showing them in a silent salesman, prominently situated in the store, will catch

The Lines That Sell Best to Campers

Supplying Camping and Fishing Parties is Business That the Average Grocer Should Work Up During the Coming Weeks—How Michie & Co., King Street West, Toronto, Have Developed a Big Trade in This Respect—Supplying Everything a Camper Needs

SUPPLYING camping and fishing parties has long since been a feature in the summer trade of Michie & Co., King Street West, Toronto. For many summers past this firm has gone after business of this kind, and on a large scale they have served the tourists that have come to Canada, as well as Canadians themselves, who are setting out on their annual holiday expedition in some of the northern lakes and woods. Toronto is the point from where many of these parties start, and it is only natural that they would get their supplies for such trips in Toronto.

This business has already opened up as far as Michie & Co. are concerned, and many parties have already set out for the north. The trout fishing usually opens the season, and from that period early in May, right on in to the fall, there is a constant and ever increasing activity in business of this kind.

Everything a Camper Needs

"We supply everything a camper needs," a member of the staff of this store, whose special duty it is to look after the filling of these orders, told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "There is nothing that they want that we will not get for them. We have given special study to this department of our business now for some years, and it is our endeavor to put in these orders everything essential for the comfort and pleasure of the party, without, at the same time, rendering equipment and supplies heavy and cumbersome."

"How did this business first start?" the question was asked.

"It was started in a very small way, of course, but it has grown and expanded at a tremendous rate," the answer began. "Our American connection has meant much in the way of building this trade. We outfit hundreds of parties from the United States every year and possibly the advertisement this feature has given us has meant more than anything else in the way of extending our trade. Canadian fishing parties, too, are numerous among our clientele, and the satisfaction and service that we have given has been spread around, one satisfied customer telling another, and so on, until our business has assumed very large figures.

Party Has Little To Do

"The service we give necessitates little preparation on the part of the people going on a fishing or camping trip. All we want to know is the nature of the trip, the time of departure and the number of people going. We do the rest, and when the time comes to set out everything is in readiness for them. A party from the United States usually wires us a few days ahead that they are coming through on such a day and will be in Toronto on their way to Algonquin Park or some of the many other fishing and hunting grounds of the north. When they arrive their supplies and equipment are all ready for them. One of the main things in fitting out a party of this kind is to have everything parcelled properly. The outfit must not be too bulky, particularly in the case of a canoe trip, where there is likely to be considerable portaging. We have bags made specially for trips of this kind, and everything is done up with the idea of compactness in mind."

SUGGESTED LINES THAT TAKE WELL WITH CAMPING PARTIES

The following articles are suggested for a party of six persons in a movable camp:

Bacon, 20 lbs.; ham or canned meats if desired, then less bacon; pork up to 20 lbs.; bread, 10 loaves; flour up to 14 lbs.; white beans, 6 lbs.; cornmeal, 5 lbs.; rice, 5 lbs.; pancake flour, 2 or 4 lbs.; biscuits (assorted) 5 lbs.; eggs, 4 doz.; or ½ lb. dessicated egg; butter in tins, 10 lbs.; cheese, 2 or 3 lbs.; evaporated milk, 1 doz.; coffee, 5 lbs.; tea, 2 lbs.; cocoa, ½ lb.; sugar, 15 lbs.; a small bottle of Sweetena, a highly concentrated sweetening; solidified soup squares, up to 2 doz.; potatoes, ½ bag, or 4 lbs. evaporated potatoes; onions, up to 10 lbs. (if desired) or 1 lb. evaporated onions; beef extract, 1 small jar, or bouillon capsules, box of 10; baking powder, small tin; salt, 1 bag; pepper and mustard, small tins; prunes, 3 lbs.; marmalade, 2 lbs.; Worcester sauce, 1 bottle; syrup, 1 tin; vinegar, 1 bot.; 2 candle lanterns, 2 doz. candles, matches, 2 cakes soap; dish cloths, rope line, etc.

For a party of six persons, two weeks, here is also a suggestion:

5 lbs. coffee, 1 lb. tea, 1 lb. cocoa, 10 lbs. butter in salt; 3 lbs. apple butter, 8 lbs. pancake flour, 5 lbs. cornmeal, 5 lbs. oatmeal, 3 boxes soda crackers, 1 bag salt, ¼ lb. pepper, 15 tins evaporated milk, 20 lbs. sugar, 6 tins corn, 6 tins tomatoes, 6 tins rice, 7 lbs. prunes, 2 lbs. seeded raisins, 4 lbs. dairy cheese, 5 lbs. beans, 2 lbs. macaroni, 15 lbs. bacon, 2 qts. maple syrup, 2 qts. Heinz sweet mixed pickles, 1 small smoked ham, 2 tins Dutch Cleanser, 12 loaves bread, 9 doz. eggs, 5 lbs. dessicated potatoes.

The Lines That Sell Best

Discussing the lines that sell best and make the strongest appeal to campers and fishermen, it was pointed out that as the selections were left entirely with the firm, edibles of a general diet were chosen, lines easily prepared, and which provided substantial, wholesome meals. Bacon, beans, rolled oats, pancake flour, potatoes and vegetables, particularly of the dehydrated kind, powdered and condensed milk, soups, etc., are lines that form the principal articles of diet. It is observed that dehydrated vegetables are preferred to vegetables in their raw state for the reason that has been previously mentioned, they are more easily carried.

Summer Residents, Too, Supplied

Michie & Co. not only fit out camping and fishing parties, but customers going to their summer homes are supplied with staple articles of food, that will provide for them while they are away. This department of their summer business is also well established, and is a popular feature. Circularizing the people is a policy of the firm, and these little circulars or catalogues that are sent out contain all the information that the prospective camper or person contemplating a fishing holiday needs in furthering his plans. Not only suggested provision lists are given, but everything he wishes to know in regard to tents, utensils for cooking, blankets, camp furniture and such like are here given. Even charts for canoe trips are provided by Michie's. Reliable maps of canoe trips are obtainable at a small cost, and any of the popular haunts of the canoeist or fisherman in the north country are procurable.

Increase Your Sales

Catering to a trade of this kind affords the average grocer an opportunity to boost business in the summer season, and to increase sales of many lines. Every town has its exodus of campers and fishermen in the summer months and the grocer can do much to keep business active by going after trade of this kind. It is profitable and establishes a reputation for service that means much in the way of future patronage.

Showing an Attractive Summer Selling Window in the Store of Charles P. Macklaier, Montreal

Angling for the Fishermen's Trade

Chas. P. Macklaier's Window at 211 St. James Street, Montreal is Dressed With the Special Intention of Attracting the Eye of the Week-end Fishing Party—Many Men are Attracted by It

MONTREAL, May 31.—It may seem surprising that a grocery window in the heart of the financial district of Montreal where practically only business men and women are passing should be able to attract so much attention that during the hours of the whole business day there is actually a crowd around the window, and further it is surprising to note that the crowd is principally made up of men, business men who cannot resist the temptation to stop and look at it. Yet such is the case with Chas. P. Macklaier's grocery window at 211 St. James St.; it has constantly been the centre of attraction. This is surely a triumph in window dressing for the grocery business.

Appeals to Fishermen

Perhaps the reason for its attraction for men is because it is dressed particularly for men. It features fishing supplies insofar as the grocery business is concerned. When Mr. Macklaier dressed this window, for it is the work of the proprietor himself, he had in mind the fact that a great number of the business men down town are enthusiastic fishermen and that they go away over the week-ends in parties of two or three for a fishing trip in the mountains. Knowing this, and remembering that men readily remember the big things for the trip but easily forget the little necessities, he has arranged the window as a reminder of these little things and a suggestion of the dainty articles of food that add to the pleasure of the trip. These include all kinds of canned goods, nuts, pickles, mosquito oil, broth in bottles, cheese, biscuits and various beverages.

Suggestive Paraphernalia

This whole display is carefully laid out on a white ground without the slightest suggestion of crowding and each article is far enough away from the other that the eye sees each separately and not as a whole mass. In this way one is almost forced by curiosity to stop and read the labels on the different shaped bottles. Perhaps this is one reason why this window has attracted so much attention. Our inborn curiosity forces us to go out of our way to see what is attracting the attention of others. There is an impelling force behind this window that is hard to describe. Perhaps the secret lies in the fact that it is timely, it is addressed to the people who are constantly passing it, it is simple in design yet clear-cut. Around all sides of the window are fishing and camping paraphernalia, fishing lines, rods, bait, paddles, cushions, lunch hampers and utensils.

Creates the Demand

In speaking to a Canadian Grocer representative about the results obtained from the window Chas. P. Macklaier said: "I have been as much surprised as anyone at the amount of attention this window has commanded. I felt that it was a timely window when I planned it and knew that the men who made most of these fishing trips frequented this street during every business day. The results in increased sales in these lines have been marked and yet the season has hardly opened. The greater effect, I know, will be felt later in the summer but I have by my window made my announcement which I know has been impressed upon the minds of the down-town business men. For another thing, I do not stock the fishing tackle and camping outfits that are in the window but I have had so many inquiries for these accessories that I have had to make arrangements to take orders for the goods."

A Mysterious Attraction

When asked if he could explain the attraction that this rather simply dressed window held for the average man Mr. Macklaier said: "I cannot explain it. One cannot look at the window and say that anything in particular attracted his attention yet once you have looked at it you feel impelled to look it over carefully until you have seen all that is in it. To me that is the secret of good window dressing. That is, simple enough that when a person looks at it they cannot help but be impressed with the line of goods displayed and not be led away from the display altogether by gaudy dressing or a jumble of merchandise."

INTEREST YOUR CLERKS

EXAMPLES of inefficiency in the grocery business come to light from time to time. Not so many days ago a representative of Canadian Grocer called at one of a series of chain stores in one of the larger cities in Canada. As a customer, he asked one of the clerks the price of five staple grocery lines. This clerk had to confess ignorance of the price of three of the five lines. Not only did he have to go and ask one of the other clerks for the quotation but this clerk too did not know what price to quote on two of the lines. The question is: Is this the clerk's fault or the proprietor's? One reason may be that the clerk does not take a real interest in the business and therefore forgets very easily the prices that are not daily impressed upon his memory. The other may be that the manager of the store has taken too much responsibility upon his own shoulders and fosters such dependence upon himself.

One solution, and the one that appears to be both the easiest and the best is not to discharge a forgetful or disinterested clerk but to at least try to make him interested in the business. The manager or the proprietor of the store has his interest in the business quite apart from a financial question. It is doubtful if he could make the business a success if he had not. This interest comes with the knowledge of the inner workings of the business, the conditions of the wholesale and primary markets, the rising and falling prices, watching for a good buying market and the devising of plans for a good selling market.

One grocer solved the plan by dividing up the buying responsibility among his clerks. Each had charge of one department and a record was kept to show how the department paid. The result is that to-day he has a most efficient staff. They watch the markets very carefully and the manager says that he himself could not buy more profitably than his clerks do now. A keen competition has grown up among them to see which will make the best percentage of profit.

Canadian Grocer strives to put weekly in the hands of every grocer and his clerks the information which will give the employees the interest necessary to make the organization, no matter how small it is, a success. When a clerk can talk intelligible reasons for the rise or fall of prices then he will instil those whom he serves with confidence both in himself as a grocer and the store for which he works. He finds a new interest and without the slightest doubt the value of his services to his employer is increased.

ANOTHER YEAR FOR OLEO

THE Government has again extended the time for allowing the importation and manufacture of margarine for one year, instead of making the permission permanent. The Hon. Dr. Tolmie, Minister of Agriculture, who conducted the Bill through the House, although remarking that "Canada is the only country in the world which has a restriction," failed to state why the Bill should not be made permanent instead of continuing to adopt the time limit. In preceding years the greatest opposition came from the farmers' party and those members representing the daily industry, but strange to say, this session there was little opposition from that quarter.

The whole world, with the exception of Canada says that margarine is a legitimate article of commerce and during the time that margarine has been sold in Canada it has proven to be a boon to a large portion of the people, especially during the period of high-priced butter. This being the case, then it is clearly seen that the politicians at Ottawa are making this wholesome food a party issue, and fail to take into consideration that the people want this article. There is no justification in barring it, even to the extent of carrying the settlement of the Bill over from year to year.

EDITORIALS IN BRIEF

THIS ISSUE of Canadian Grocer gives particular attention to the selling of Summer lines. Now is the time to formulate your plans for summer selling. The hot weather is here, and from now on, until September, the grocer can stimulate business by getting behind many lines that have a special appeal during the warm days.

LIFE ISN'T in holding a good hand, but in placing a poor hand well, quoting a well known motto. The same can be applied to trade at the present time, the moral being that the grocer by exerting extra selling effort to certain lines, can maintain business at levels that compare favorably wih a year ago.

"Retailer and the Consumer's Dollar"

Some Plain Facts About the Retail Distribution of Foods—Meaning of Technical Terms Such as Operating Margin, Etc., is Explained in Interesting Little Pamphlet That Every Grocer Should Have

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

I HAVE found within the confines of a very small pamphlet the very best study of the grocery business I ever saw. In less than eighteen moderate sized pages there are crowded more facts and plain elucidations thereof than one could treat adequately, in full detail, in a large volume. It is the sanest thing I ever read on the subject. The title is "What the Retailer Does with the Consumer's Dollar," published by the Agricultural Experiment Station of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin, and should be read by everybody who wants the plain facts about retail distribution of foods. I don't know the cost, but urge you to write for Bulletin 324 and send 25 cents in stamps.

This study covers conditions in the grocery business of Madison for the year 1919. It shows that the 45,000 residents of Madison bought $6,840,000 worth of groceries, meats and milk that year, distributed by 160 stores, the majority of which had no adequate system of bookkeeping and therefore were unable to give any definite information about their business, and less than half of which were able to furnish any definite information as to costs or margins.

The discussion is opened by definitions of business terms—buying price, selling price and operating margin. This last is so commonly misunderstood and so hazy in the average merchant's mind that I shall condense the paragraph wherein that is covered, as follows:

Meanings of Technical Terms Clarified

Operating margin is number of cents of each dollar which retailer does not pay out for goods. It is the difference between buying and sale price. Percentage margin means one thing to consumers and another to merchants, for while consumers think of margin as added to the cost, merchants think of it as a portion of the sale. The consumer thinks 25 cents is added to 75 cents for the sale of something for a dollar, whereas the merchant thinks of the 25 cents as part of the dollar obtained. Thus the consumer thinks of 33 1-3 per cent., while the merchant thinks of it as 25 per cent. In this discussion margin is figured on sales.

This is all so refreshingly better than former academic ways that it is a relief to find it.

That eight stores out of the thirty-six that gave reliable information were unable to make any net profit at all—in fact had to meet deficiencies of $200 to $1,921—emphasized the need for greater efficiency.

The writer goes on to show that retail stores are operated because consumers want certain goods and services to satisfy an immense variety of wants in widely varying conditions; that the retailer's opportunity lies in filling these wants according to the peculiar needs of his customers; that the retailer has not entirely fulfilled his mission and that customers have not helped him to better his service; yet retail stores perform a valuable service and are essential for reasons which are outlined.

Discussing price variations and retail margins, the writer goes to the heart of the problem thus:

The retailer is in business for profit, to realize which he competes for a reward which goes only to relatively efficient merchants, as can be seen by the fact that many storekeepers fail to make day wages; to get profit the retailer must not only buy right but sell as high as possible, while keeping expenses at the minimum; prices cannot be identical because markets and consumer demands change so that like margins cannot always be had on like products, nor can the same margins be obtained always and there are therefore periods of loss and gain in every business. When apparent shortage causes a higher price level, as recently in sugar, the man with stocks on hand got a high margin merely by following the market in competition with those who purchased currently.

Then follows this statement that is remarkable, surely:

"Regardless of how much or how little he may have paid for his supply, his procedure was economically justifiable. Competition, if it works at all, is bound to make prices seek the same level, but not necessarily a lower level, all political and popular condemnation of the principle to the contrary" (notwithstanding).

Eminently Fair in Every Detail

How could anything be sounder and saner than that? In fact, the booklet is sound and sane in every line and as such it is fair. For let it be understood that I am not making the favorable comment on the booklet because it is merely fair to the grocer. I don't care much about any special pleading for the grocer. I praise it because it is soundly logical, sound economics and therefore bound to promote understanding among producers, retailers and consumers—and that is what we want. Incidentally, it is fair because it must be fair in order to be sound!

Then follows a tabulation which shows margins obtained not on averages but on many items specifically segregated. That I shall use again some time, but it is illuminating in what it reveals.

Further:

Besides price fluctuation, the services rendered and cost thereof will adjust competitive margins to a justifiable level; perishability influences margins, slackening of demand often resulting in sales below cost to salvage perishables; margins in Madison ranged from 7 to 25 per cent.

Stores average small, four-fifths selling less than $50,000 a year, while five stores, or 6.3 per cent. of the total, sold one-third of the total sales and one-fifth made more than half the total sales. These facts are also tabulated.

Then follow details of how 84 to 85 cents out of every dollar paid to Madison grocers by consumers was paid out for merchandise — the average margin being only 14.8 per cent., expenses 11.7 to 12.3 per cent. and net profit 2.5 to 4.5 per cent. It further develops that the profitable stores charged no more than the others, only they were more efficient and so operated for less average expense. The margins are tabulated in detail. Varying expenses, margins, sizes and effect of competition are analyzed and tabulated; details are given of all factors and net "balances" or profits; labor costs are analyzed and tabulated, also delivery expenses and rents.

Have I indicated that this booklet is informative? It is more than that. It is illuminating and crammed full of figures vital to the grocery business—facts and figures that you cannot afford not to have and know! You will miss something wonderfully helpful if you do not write at once for your copy.

Evidence of Incurable Optimism

A rather unusual feature of this pamphlet is that in the first paragraph certain conclusions are set forth—the conclusion before the argument. It reads about this way:

"Consumers must not look for lower costs so long as many small stores remain in business because they can neither buy to advantage nor reduce expenses; so while present margins barely cover expense in small stores, they provide for expense and profit in large, well-managed stores. 'Contrary to public be-

Where Real Salesmanship Gets The Proper Remuneration

MONTREAL, May 28.—Some grocers are always looking for new specialty lines which they can feature and in which they claim there is a good profit. It is a fact that most new lines on the market pay better than the old, well-established lines, and the reason for this lies in the fact that the retailer is paid for the effort he has to put behind the sale of the line. Real salesmanship pays well but when the goods are sold by the manufacturers' efforts, the retailer is simply paid for the distribution. The result is that the easier and the more effective the effort put behind the sale of a new line, the more profitable is that line to the grocer.

A Dainty Arrangement

In seeking such a plan of sale for a new line a Montreal down-town grocer has arranged a small stand, daintily decorated yet almost extreme in the contrasting colors used. The line he is featuring is a branded package of flavored shredded cocoanut. Each flavor has a distinctive color. For example, the violet is a light purple, the peppermint is white, almond is yellow in color and orange is orange in color. Each one of the flavors is displayed in a glass dish and a plate of small biscuits covered with a sample of the cocoanut is left for the customers to taste. The inviting appearance of the whole lay-out attracts attention and the grocer is quick to make the suggestion that a package of the goods should be tried.

Big Sales Result

The flavoring of the cocoanut is a novelty and its appearance in itself is attractive. The result is that he has made big sales of this new line on which he claims there is a good profit. If he had simply arranged the packages on the counter or on the shelves as he would a well-known line it is doubtful if he would have had any sales worth speaking of or he might have talked many hours during a week without a result worth while if he had not planned his display so that the goods would speak for themselves. In this way he has found a successful plan of selling a new line with the least possible effort on his own part.

the loss. It shows now in an increased business."

A Big Margin on Cheese

A striking example of the margin between wholesale and retail prices is on cheese, which is now quoted wholesale at from 16 to 18 cents a pound. Three retailers in one section of this city are selling the cheese at 45 cents a pound or they are at least offering it at that price, while another merchant in the same district is really selling it at 28 cents. He agrees that he is not making a profit but he is attracting the trade which later will stick with him when he can make a profit. His idea is to develop a trade in cheese and in this way he is attracting the people to his store and showing them what he has to offer besides cheese. He is very well pleased with his loss. In fact he is getting considerable advertising from those who have bought cheese there because it is a characteristic of the public to pass the word on when they have found a real bargain.

Vancouver grocers will hold their annual picnic on July 13. It has been definitely set as the date when the Vancouver grocers will hold their anual frolic on Bowen Island.

ROBBERS GOT LESS THAN $10

Toronto.—Four young men, Fred Henry, Victor Carter, Walter Williams, and Fred Le Grand, were arrested here last Sunday, charged with robbery and violence. On the previous Saturday night they held up two Warren brothers, who are drivers for D. W. Clark, grocer at Avenue Road, robbing them of the contents of their money pouches. According to the story of the drivers, when they went to the stable to put the horses away for the night they were pounced on by four men who put handkerchiefs over their faces and robbed them of their money. The amount secured was less than ten dollars.

the eye immediately, and sales will invariably result, for, after all, there are few motoring parties that do not carry along a box of good candy.

The merchant by frequently dressing his windows and getting the attention of visiting people can add to his trade. Featuring summer lines such as biscuits, olives, sardines and other such foodstuffs that the grocer knows from experience take well with picnic parties is good business. There is a wide range of choice delicacies that will sell well at this time, and for the next four months, by directing effort to the selling of them, and going after business of this kind, the grocer will be surprised what it has meant at the end of the summer in the way of maintaining his trade at satisfactory levels.

BRANDON MERCHANTS' ANNUAL MEETING

Brandon, May 27.—Speaking to the members of the Brandon branch of the Manitoba Retail Merchants' Association, at the annual meeting last week, P. A. Kennedy, president of the board of trade, spoke on ways and means whereby members of the association could help to develop the business of the city in all its various branches. Mayor Dinsdale, of Brandon, was also one of the speakers who spoke of the need of co-operation at the present time. Reports were presented by President Crawford and Treasurer J. McDonald showing what had been accomplished during the year.

Election of Officers

The election of officers for the coming year resulted as follows: W. J. Creelman, president; Milton Donaldson, first vice-president; Angus McDonald, second vice-president; John F. McDonald, treasurer, and John Popkin, secretary.

A. R. Ivey, provincial organizer, reported on the organization of the districts adjacent to Brandon, and stated that representatives from the various locals would be appointed to act with Brandon when advisable.

After considerable discussion it was decided to keep the Thursday half holiday for all stores for the five months between May 1 and September 30, while the grocery stores would close on Thursday afternoons for the whole year.

Provincial Officers Present

The principal speakers of the evening were A. F. Higgins, provincial president, and John H. Curie, provincial secretary. WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MONTREAL, June 1.—The grocery market is fairly steady, and while the demand is almost entirely for immediate requirements, the trade cannot be said to be slow. Confidence in market conditions is lacking and dealers appear to be afraid to buy. The break in prices that has come has been gradual and conditions show signs of improvement. For example rice and tapioca is showing strength with primary quotations advanced ¾ cent. The demand in consequence shows improvement. The local sugar market is somewhat disturbed by the price cutting that is going on among local wholesalers but the refiners hold firm to their price with a firmer raw market backing them up. Raisins have been advanced in price and dried apples and apricots are stronger. Package dates are a little easier in price. Lower quotations are made on green peas and flax seed. Canned lobsters and pineapple are up to price while one brand of soups is slightly lower. The spice market is quiet. There is little change in the tea market although primary markets show more strength on Japan and Ceylon teas. Molasses and corn syrups are unchanged in price. Lamp burners are advanced. Another brand of soap is following the list of reductions in that line.

Raisins Up in Price

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS.—The strength of raisins have resulted in an advance on both bulk and package raisins. Bulk raisins are in general up one cent a pound, while packaged lots are up one and two cents. Sair dates are advanced ½ cent a pound. Dromedary and Excelsior package dates are slightly lower in price. Apricots and dried apples are strong and in some cases an advance of ¼ cent a pound is quoted on dried apples. As a result of the higher prices on raisins there is a firmer tendency to currants with an improved demand. The dried fruit market in general is firm and more activity is noticeable in the market as a result of the higher prices.

Local Sugar Market Upset

Montreal.

SUGAR.—The refiners are firmly maintaining their quotations on granulated sugar despite the fact that a number of wholesalers are cutting the price. A firm market for raws is backing up the refiners in holding the price. The state of affairs that now exists in the sugar market is abnormal and is looked upon with disfavor by the refiners. The result of the cutting is that sales of sugar are being made between different local wholesalers and an uncertain atmosphere exists which does not help sales of sugar are going to stabilize the market.

Porto Rico grapefruit have been advanced to $6.00, and Jamaican are also selling at $6.00. The grapefruit season is about over and supplies are short. California navel oranges have been advanced 25 cents per case and prices range from $6.00 to $6.75, according to size. Strawberries (imported) are advanced 10 cents per pint, now selling at 45 cents. The first supplies of imported Georgia peaches are offered on the market at an initial price of $10.00 for the six basket crates.

California fancy seedless raisins in packages are also advanced in price. The 15 ounce package is 2 cents higher, the 11 ounce package is advanced 1 cent per pound. This is on account of the general advance in the price of raisins.

New Cabbage Cheaper

Montreal.

VEGETABLES.—Lower prices are quoted this week on new cabbage as a result of a better supply offered. Yellow onions are down 25 cents per cwt., while red onions are up 25 cents per cwt. The first Egyptian onions are offered on the market at $5.00 per hundred pounds. Prices on new tomatoes are holding with a fair supply, but it is expected that within the next few weeks prices will start on a decline to meet the prices of the first supplies of home-grown that will be offered on this market. The market is active, with a good demand for green vegetables.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 1.—Although there still appears to be a great deal of irregularity in prices quoted by wholesalers, the undertone has a saner feeling. Wholesalers are more inclined to stick to the manufacturers list prices. Sugar prices are firmly held by the refiners but wholesalers continue to cut prices. It is now considered that second-hand supplies of sugar are practically cleaned up under an improved demand. Rolled oats are easier, but the demand for cereals generally is very quiet. The primary rice markets are holding a firm position. Teas and coffees are steady to firm. Evaporated apples are higher. Prunes and apricots are firmly held at the advanced prices. Currants are becoming scarce and higher at points of shipment in Greece. Cane syrups are lower. Lamp chimneys and lantern globes are higher. One brand of salad dressing has advanced. Strawberries are lower. Lemons are higher. Local potatoes have firmed with quotations higher.

Canned Goods Unchanged

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS. — The market is fairly steady and although there is still some irregularity in prices, it is not so noticeable. There has been an active demand for vegetables and it is considered that stocks will be fairly well cleaned up by the time the new goods arrive. Stocks of fruits are still heavy and canners this season have adopted the policy to pack only the amount they have sold.

Evaporated Apples Higher

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS.—Evaporated apples continue firm and prices are again advanced. Currants are scarce and firm at Grecian shipping points. Spot stocks are moving freely at unchanged quotations. Raisins are quiet and as there are prospects for lower prices on the new crop in the fall some houses have reduced their quotations. Apricots and prunes continue to hold the advance registered last week and there are indications that the pack will be practically cleaned up by the time the new crop is harvested.

WINNIPEG MARKETS

WINNIPEG, June 1.—The markets for general grocery commodities are ruling fairly steady and merchants continue to buy in small quantities. The tea market is firm but the coffee market continues quiet. Opening prices on new canned pineapple have been named by the packers but this will not affect local prices as the new pack does not reach this market before the first of October. The cereal market is slightly firmer especially on bulk rolled oats. Flour advanced 30 cents per barrel. All dried fruits are showing a firmer tone. The raw sugar market is quiet with a steady tone. Nuts continue in a strong position. The American rice market has strengthened during the week due to export demand. Fruits and vegetables are showing an improvement in the demand.

Coffee Market Quiet

Winnipeg.

COFFEE.—The coffee market is reported quiet on all lines. Roasters are intent to purchase only for requirements and will not be induced to increase holdings. Brazil coffee is holding up in price and it is not expected any lower quotations can come. Coffees which are being offered are mostly of poor quality as all the desirable lines have been shipped. The new season Brazil should be marketed in about a month's time.

DRIED FRUITS.—Latest reports from primary markets state that prunes brought higher prices than the preceding sale and that most of them were bought for export purposes. Apricots are reported scarce and it is evident that spot stocks have been well cleaned up. The recent improvement in foreign exchange and the settlement of the reparations argument has strengthened the export situation considerably and foreign buyers have been active during the week. Peaches are also reported light and indications point that they have suffered considerably from the frost. Raisins are nominal. Both dates and figs are more or less quiet.

Relation of Collections to Turnover

Profit Does Not Depend So Much Upon the Amount of Money Invested in a Business as it Does Upon the Way in Which That Money is Made to Work—It Should be the Merchant's Chief Occupation to Make His Dollars Work

TURNOVER of stock is the goal of of every business undertaking and frequent turnover is the profitable turnover. An investigator for Armour & Co. has given an analysis of turnover and the essentials that enter into sales and frequent turnover.

To obtain turnover the merchant must make sales. Sales are the life blood of the profitable turnover of working capital. Those two factors are more inter-related than any other two in business. Time was when some manufacturers considered their sale completed when they shipped their goods to the retailer and the retailer considered his sale completed when the transaction across the counter had been closed. But now both of them realize that the sale is not completed until satisfaction has been given, and that satisfaction has not proved until the customer has been brought in again. The sale that every merchant wants in his store is the sale that reproduces itself in repeat business.

Meaning of Turnover

Turnover means the investment of dollars in goods, the sale of those goods, reinvestment, resale—repeating the process often and at a profit. When the merchant invests money in merchandise, then sells the merchandise and extracts his profit, that is one turnover. When he invests again and resells, that is another turnover. The merchant does not turn over goods. He sells goods and that turns over the working capital invested in them. Every merchant should know how many times a year he turns over his invested capital. Profit does not depend so much upon the amount of money invested in a business as it does upon the way in which that money is made to work. Dollars are workmen and the faster they work, the more they accomplish for the merchant. It should be the merchant's chief occupation to make his dollars work, to repeat investment and sale, to get immediate collection of accounts. Turnover is just as definitely connected with collection as salesmanship is with service and satisfaction.

The Essentials of Turnover

Here are the essentials of turnover:

First—The merchant must study the needs of his community. He must anticipate his community's needs.

Second—He must stock the goods, and there should be a variety of products; but too large a variety of brands of each different product is a scattering of investment, that is certain to complicate buying, selling and bookkeeping, with a resultant slowing-up of turnover. Every product selected should be judged as to sale quality. The trade mark should be well known, so that it will not need an introduction. It must be of a quality that will bring repeat calls.

Third—Customers must be given facilities to buy. In other words, the merchant must have adequate space for an attractive display of his goods.

Fourth—Collections must be made promptly. Past due accounts are obligations for the merchant. The moment payment becomes overdue, the merchant ceases to be a merchant giving credit accommodations, but becomes a banker who lends money without interest.

Advertised quality goods make quicker turnover than any other kind. Recently a well known newspaper of national reputation discovered that advertised goods were turning over three or four times faster than those that were not advertised and comparison of advertised and non-advertised goods was made by this newspaper. The amount of capital invested in stock was the same in each case—$10,000. It was assumed that profits were 10% of the sales.

Here are the results:

	Non-Advertised Goods
$10,000	Capital.
40%	Mark-up.
$14,000	Retail value of stock.
3	Number of Turnovers.
$42,000	Total business for the year.
10%	Percentage of net profit.
$4,200	Net profit at end of year.
	Advertised Goods
$10,000	Capital.
20%	Mark-up.
$12,000	Retail value of stock.
6	Number of turnovers.
$72,000	Total business for the year.
10%	Percentage of net profit.
$7,200	Net profit at end of year.

It will be seen that, though the mark-up was twice as large in the case of non-advertised goods, yet they yielded a smaller profit than the advertised. This is due solely to the fact that the turnover of the latter was twice as fast.

RETAILER AND CONSUMER

lief, it is the excessive costs of small, inefficient stores that make present margins necessary. . . . Volume of business is . . . necessary to bring increased efficiency,' and this can be accomplished among small stores only by consolidation, for improvement in retailing requires their elimination."

I say this is evidence of incurable optimism because the booklet pictures merchants who operate on 14.8 per cent. average margin. Such margin is not bettered in Britain, the proverbial home of efficient retailing, where the ancient system of apprenticeship, as established ages ago by the guilds, turns out the best retailers in the world. There the average margin is 15 per cent. and the average net 2½ per cent.

Again, this review covers 1919, a year when things were steadily advancing in the market. Madison is a town where the consumer demands service so exacting and costly—the retired farmer who is the abused "producer" in most these tales being as insistent on such service as the rest—that over a series of normal years it costs around 17 to 18 per cent. to operate a grocery store there. Thus the margin in Madison must run—and does run usually—around 20 to 21 per cent. The only way such extraordinarily low margins were taken as are shown in this booklet in 1919 is that computations in the booklet are based on replacement values whereas merchants generally did not follow the upward trend of values but sold on the basis of their original costs. No wonder many of them failed of any net profit!

B. C. Grocer Increases Sales of Meats

Meat Case and Refrigerator Counter Are Factors in Building Turnover in Provision Lines—Mutual Trading Co., Ltd., at Ladysmith, B.C., Find Quantity Selling of Oranges and Lemons the Best Method to Pursue

SELLING provisions and produce lines is a feature of the business of the Mutual Trading Co., Ltd., at Ladysmith, B.C. This company took over the Simon Leiser & Co., Ltd., a little over a year ago, making a number of alterations in the premises that R. A. Petch, manager, states have meant not only improvement in the appearance of the store, but also increased business. A new glass front meat case, as shown in the accompanying photograph, is one of the new pieces of equipment that have been installed. It is an original idea that Mr. Petch worked out himself, and he declares that it has proved entirely satisfactory.

Showing the refrigerator counter and meat case in the store of the Mutual Trading Co. at Ladysmith, B.C.

Increases Meat Sales

"We have found that this case for meats has added very materially to our sales of meats, and especially cooked meat," Mr. Petch told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "It has more than paid for itself, and the investment has been well worth while. The upper part has sliding glass doors that we use in the summer months, and there is also wire screening to give ventilation and keep out any flies that might be around, although we take every precaution possible to keep the latter at a minimum. The base, of course, is a meat refrigerator counter, with an ice chamber in the centre section. This department is at the rear of the store, but cannot fail to attract the attention of the customer. We always endeavor to have a nice display of meats, as we believe and have found that it aids materially in selling. We have a good meat slicer, and we would not now be without it. It facilitates service, not only in the fact that it makes it possible to serve a greater number of people in less time than in the ordinary way of cutting up bacon or other meats, but it permits the customer to have their bacon or cooked meats at a certain desired thickness."

Specialize on Fruits

Selling fruits also represents a big portion of the turnover in the store of the Mutual Trading Co., Ltd. "We are comparatively close to the markets in Victoria," Mr. Petch stated, "a distance of only seventy miles away. We have made it a point of selling only the best that we can buy, and we get our supplies in daily, and in such quantities as we are sure of selling. In this way we are always selling fresh and attractive stocks. We find that oranges always make an attractive window, more pleasing to the eye than any other natural color.

Oranges in Quantities

"We price our oranges on the quantity basis, as we find this system stimulates buying the quantity we price. For instance, at the present time we are selling 25 oranges for 50 cents, and it is proving very profitable. We always sell lemons by the dozen, or so much for larger quantities. We find that the public will buy fruit pretty much in the quantity at which we price it. If you are selling five oranges for ten cents, they will buy just five. If you show them 25 for 50 cents, they will buy the 25 every time. When they buy in quantities they find various ways of using the fruit, which perhaps would never be thought of if they had a smaller quantity.

Attractive Fruit Windows

"We pay special attention to making attractive fruit window displays, and especially at the week-end. Open display front windows have doubled our sales of fruit in the summer season. Peaches, pears and apricots come in for a good deal of attention in season. We always make a practice of rewrapping the top layers of peach baskets, using the choicest ones on the top. This adds to the attractiveness of a display and helps sales."

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, June 1.—There is a firmer tone to the provision market in all lines except those affected by the hog market. Hogs have been steadily declining in price. Smoked meats are easier in prices with a drop in cooked hams and some other cooked lines. There is an improved demand for cooked and smoked meats. Lard is steady at the low quotation. On the other hand the improved export and domestic demand for butter and eggs has strengthened up that market with a higher price on each. Old cheese has dropped in price, reflecting the weak condition of the market for the new make. Gaspe salmon is in good supply and lower prices are expected. The high freight rates are holding up the price of fresh lake fish which is only in fair supply. Haddock and halibut are in good supply. Brook trout is scarce.

Further Drop in Live Hogs

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS.—Prices quoted on live hogs, weighed off cars show a decline of one cent per pound through the week with still a weak feeling indicating a further drop. Selects are now selling at $10.50 per hundred. As yet there is no change in the quotations on dressed hogs or fresh cuts of meat, but there is a tendency towards lower prices.

Smoked Meats Easy

Montreal.

SMOKED MEATS.—There is no actual change in smoked meats, although there is an easier feeling on account of the declining hog market. The best breakfast bacon is selling at from 36 to 47 cents a pound. Windsor bacon is quoted at from 49 to 50 cents a pound. Smoked hams are unchanged in price. There is a good steady demand for all lines of smoked meats.

COOKED MEATS—As a result of the lower prices on hogs lower prices are quoted on cooked and boiled hams. The ordinary boiled hams are quoted at from 48 to 49 cents, while pressed hams are selling at 53 cents. Pork tongue is reduced to 36 cents a pound. There is a good demand for cooked meats on account of the warm weather.

BUTTER—As indicated in Canadian Grocer reports last week creamery butter has started on an upward movement with a keener demand for supplies both from local and export buyers. Prices have advanced one cent per pound. Creamery is now quoted at 31 cents for prints and 30 cents for solids. The supply is keeping up well but the demand has grown so that the market has been considerably strengthened.

Old Cheese Lower

CHEESE.—There is an unsettled feeling to the cheese market with prices on a downward trend and a lack of demand from the export market. Prices on new cheese have dropped to 19 cents a pound wholesale and old cheese is selling at 33 cents. While new cheese is only easier in price this week, strong cheese shows a decline of from one to two cents a pound in sympathy with the new market.

Good Supply of Gaspe Salmon

Montreal.

FRESH FISH—The high freight rates are keeping up the price of fish. Halibut is in good supply, selling at 21 cents. Whitefish is quoted at 22 cents and fresh lake fish is holding at 20 cents. Gaspe salmon ranges in price from 35 cents to 40 cents, but the supply is good and the indications are for a lower price in the near future. Brook trout is very scarce and is selling at 50 cents. There is a good seasonable demand for fish.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 1.—The hog market continues with a downward movement; prices dropped during the week and packers are endeavoring to further reduce values. Dressed hogs and pork cuts are also lower. Cooked meats are slightly lower. Cured meats have easier tendencies. Shortening showed a decline but lard prices are unchanged although the tendency is that lard will reach lower levels. Butter and cheese are firmer and higher. Eggs advanced but in some quarters the opinion is expressed that this is only temporary in view of the heavy stocks as compared with last year for the same period. There is practically no demand for margarine and in consequence prices have dropped. Poultry prices declined under heavier receipts and a moderate demand.

Butter Prices Advance

Toronto.

BUTTER.—The market has firmer tendencies with prices advanced one to two cents per pound. No. 1 creamery prints are quoted to the trade at 30 to 32 cents per pound and second grades at 28 to 29 cents. Some of the fancy grades packed in one pound cartons are bringing as high as 34 cents. A greater activity is noted in the market, principally for export and for storage, which is generally conceded responsible for the firmer tone in the market.

Cheese Market Strengthens

Toronto.

CHEESE.—Under stimulus of improved export conditions, the cheese market has developed a firmer tone. The general opinion is expressed that cheese has reached the bottom level and that from now on a firm market can be expected. Quotations to the trade are advanced one half cent per pound, bringing the price to 19 cents. There is still some old cheese available at 33 to 34 cents per pound.

Although production has somewhat fallen off during the past week, stocks are several thousand cases in exces of last year at this time. United States stocks are also greatly in excess of last year. There appears to be a diversity of opinion as to future conditions. Some houses maintain that the present firmness of the market is only temporary and that prices will not hold at the advanced levels, while there are others who maintain that a firmer market can now be expected.

Margarine Demand Slow

Toronto.

MARGARINE—There appears to be little or practically no demand for margarine. The demand during the past winter months has at no time been brisk but since the bottom dropped out of the butter market it has been particularly noticeable. The best grades of margarine are quoted at 20 to 22 cents per pound.

WINNIPEG MARKETS

WINNIPEG, June 1.—The feature of the produce market is the general weak condition that prevails. Prices on butter, cheese and lard are now lower than they have been for years. Butter made another decline with good supplies arriving. The cheese market shows further weakness with only a fair demand. Eggs are showing a firmer tone and are selling freely. Lard is quoted lower. Smoked and cooked meats are in active demand with prices remaining steady. Quotations on live hogs are lower. There is no change in the fish market.

Further Drop in Butter

Winnipeg.

BUTTER.—Butter prices show a further decline amounting to 2 cents per pound on creamery prints. At the lower level of values there is a good local demand for supplies which indicates an increase in the consumption and it is interesting to note that the price of butter is now lower than it has been for several years. It is not thought that butter will go much lower as the farmers will not sell their butter fat at any lower prices.

Fresh Trout Arriving

Winnipeg.

FISH.—Prices are steady with an improved supply of fresh cod, trout, halibut and salmon. There is also an improvement in the supply of fresh crabs and prices are holding firm at 35 cents each. Lobsters are selling freely at a reduction, now quoted at 55 cents each.

THE WEEKLY HALF HOLIDAY

IN many cities, towns and villages throughout the Dominion, merchants will be closing one afternoon each week and as in other years Canadian Grocer will again publish a list of the municipalities wherein there is a half holiday each week. It is important that this list be accurate and that every locality be represented as business houses have found this list a valuable one in assisting them to plan the trips of their representatives.

We therefore request merchants to fill in this coupon and return at their earliest convenience.

A Ford Truck is a Business Builder

Prompt deliveries boost business. The grocer with reputation for getting these last minute orders out on time is the grocer whose business is going to show the most rapid growth.

Rapid delivery cannot be accomplished with horses. Willing they may be but their endurance and speed are confined within narrow limits—flesh and blood can't compete with steel.

Scorching heat and flies in summer have no effect on the Ford Truck, and if it has to be on the go at top speed for sixteen hours on a busy Saturday no Monday morning stiffness stands between it and another big day's work.

Dayton Scales save your time, the time of your clerks—which you pay for—and the time of your customers, every time anything is weighed.

DAYTON

He has the goods—but he can't deliver them

DELAY, vexation, lost trade! This is the price paid by the merchant who fails to keep a sufficient number of swivel base Dayton Scales on his counters.

With the housewife of to-day, management of the home is a business. She has neither time nor inclination to stand in a waiting line before the grocer's counter, when she sees clerks waiting and customers waiting.

The real obstruction to prompt, efficient service in such cases is the failure of the merchant to back up his business adequately with modern service-giving store equipment.

He has the goods—but he can't deliver them!

To-day, as never before, the woman buyer is interested in the accuracy, speed, cleanliness of the store service she receives. These are prime considerations when she is choosing her grocer.

Dayton Scales, Dayton Cheese Cutters, Dayton Meat Slicers in the store—and plenty of them—are a silent guarantee of accuracy, speed, cleanliness. With a battery of Daytons, any grocer who "has the goods," can deliver them with a maximum of ease and rapidity.

KEEP UP YOUR STANDARDS

Have you ever noticed how much your attitude towards your business plays in its success? If you think good times, you will show it in your face, most likely, and display it in your actions.

It's a great thing, don't you think, to show your customers your quality, and, do you know, you do this best by the character of the goods you sell High class articles go well with a cheerful disposition and a desire to serve.

Your customers have known for years the quality of RED ROSE TEA. They naturally look for it in your store. The sight of it there makes them say to themselves: "This grocer knows a good tea," and it follows that you must be selling other good things, too.

Don't be tempted, when so many poor teas may be had for a song, to cater to a cheap trade and lower your standards. Your success in the long run depends on more than an extra cent's profit. It is based on a continued and satisfied customer gained and held through such quality lines as RED ROSE TEA.

CANADIAN GROCER

VOL. XXV. TORONTO, JUNE 10, 1921 No. 23

Aims to Turn Stock Over Every Month

Rivett and Hardman, King St. E., Hamilton, believe that quick turnovers are the only way to success in the grocery business. Always follow the market. Display is important in selling effort in this store. Get behind new lines and increase sales in this way.

TURNING your stock over quickly is the only way to conduct a grocery business successfully, according to the opinion of Mr. Rivett of Rivett & Hardman, grocer on King St., East Hamilton, Ont. Such is the policy followed by this firm during the years that they have been in the grocery business in Hamilton, and it has been attended with a good deal of success. This firm also conducts another store in Hamilton, and at the King east store, it is a combination grocery and butcher business.

Twelve Times Yearly

"We aim to turn our stock over at least twelve times a year," Mr. Rivett told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "On a great many lines, of course, we turn them over even oftener, and there are some, such as canned goods, that do not sell as rapidly. However on most of the stock carried in a grocery store, I think a merchant should make it a point to sell as quickly as possible, keeping it going out, and buying again as the necessity demands. It is poor business to load up with too much. Rather, it is better to buy often, as lines are depleted. Of course, during the war when everything was going up, buying in large quantities, when possible, was comparatively safe, but in times like the present, we find our safest policy is to buy only enough to meet our requirements."

Follows Market Down

Discussing with Mr. Rivett present conditions, reviewing the period of declining markets, he stated that it had been his firm's policy to follow the markets downward, giving the customers the advantage of lower prices. "It has been absolutely necessary to do this," he stated, "in order to hold our trade. In a period of market declines the grocer has to constantly sense out his customers, in their buying. By this I mean, one found a customer who was not buying a certain line, and I knew that she used to buy it regularly and in good quantities. What was the reason for the falling off? That was what the grocer had to find out. The reason for the non-buying was possibly because the grocer down the street was offering it at a lower price than we were. However I think where the retailer is constantly adjusting his prices, in line with market conditions, and as quickly as these declines warranted the same, he had little to contend with, in the way of lost customers. We have endeavored to get down to the new levels and believe by so doing we have been able to maintain trade on a satisfactory basis. Competition, too, is so keen in the grocery trade, that the merchant who isn't keeping his prices down to the lowest possible level, consistent with a fair profit, finds it diffcult to do business."

Bad Debt Losses Almost Nil

Rivett and Hardman do business on a credit basis and declare that their losses from bad debts and such like had been very small. In fact, Mr. Rivett stated, in the course of a year they were reduced to a minimum. They would not be more than a fraction of one per cent. While credit accounts cannot be said to be just as good as cash, where the customer pays weekly or semi-monthly, their trade is good and inclined to be steadier and mor regular than the customer who is paying cash. The latter is more apt to distribute her buying over a number of stores.

Display Is All Important

The value of display is not lostt sight of in Rivett and Hardman stores. In fact that is the point that impresses one on entering the store. The arrangement of the interior is such as to show goods to the best possible advantage. Bulk displays are everywhere in evidence, and if the clerk never made a suggestion to a customer, there are suggestions everywhere in evidence. Neatly arranged table displays, counter displays, and goods shown in wire baskets, with prices attached, at once attract the eye. These wire baskets assist very much in selling goods, Mr. Rivett stated. He follows a plan of displaying certain lines in the windows, and when changing the window displays, instead of putting the goods back on the shelves again, he puts them into baskets, which are prominently placed on the floor in the front part of the store, and the sale is continued from the baskets instead of from the windows. Following this method, this firm first displayed a certain line of canned beans in the window, afterwards showing them in the wire baskets. The display was attended with a fair measure of success in th way of sales, Mr. Rivett stating that they sold five cases during the time that the goods were shown.

Get Public From All Directions

The windows in the Rivett and Hardman store on King Street east are specially adapted for display, and the firm makes the most of them. Situated on a corner of two good streets, there are two windows that catch the eye of the passing public, coming from the four directions.

Window and interior displays are backed up with selling talks over the counter, with very gratifying results. In fact more than one new line has been successfully introduced in the Rivett and Hardman store. "If a line recommends itself to us," Mr. Rivett added, "we do not hesitate to introduce it. We have built up a very satisfactory demand for a number of lines that have come on the market in the past few years.

Introducing New Lines

In this connection Mr. Rivett mentioned a certain salad dressing preparation. On the occasion of the visit of the Canadian Grocer he was showing it rather prominently, which caused Canadian Grocer to inquire about it. "The summer is a splendid time to boost it," Mr. Rivett remarked, "and we have started already to get it going. It sells well with us all the time, but sales in the summer months always show an increase. It is a good summer line to get behind." Other products too owe an increased demand to the selling efforts of Rivett and Hardman, as it is a constant practice in their stores to introduce new lines that come on the market, provided of

Making People Read Advertisements

Getting away from the stereotyped form of ad.-writing. Get the people looking for your advertisements by making them original in their appeal.—The experience of C. J. Whyte, Wellington Street, Montreal

MONTREAL, (Special).—There is an enviable achievement in being able to write advertising that the public look forward to reading, and besides there is satisfaction in seeing the direct results from such advertising. There is an art in getting away from the stereotyped form of ad-writing, and especially so in the case of copy for groceries. It is one thing to write an advertisement for the newspaper, but quite another thing to know that the people read it. The grocer carefully studies the wants of his customers and then buys his stock accordingly. If he intends to spend money advertising, he should also study the wants of his customers in reading matter. He should ask himself — What do the people want to read? — What are they looking in the papers for? What will attract their attention, and what will make them read every word of my advertising?

Different Types of Appeal

C. J. Whyte, propietor of Whyte's Ayrshire Grocery, 1280 Wellington St. Montreal, writes his own advertising which appears in every issue of the Verdun Weekly Free Press. A quarter page space is occupied by the copy which is divided into two parts. The first part carries the appeal to the public, which is the attractive part, and the second part bears with the grocery business directly, giving prices on all the main lines sold in the store. In speaking of his advertising to a CANADIAN GROCER representative, Mr. Whyte said, "Here are many types of advertising which carry a more or less direct appeal to the buying public with varying results. The majority of these types are not applicable to the grocery business, yet the grocer who wishes to get the best results possible from the money he spends on advertising must study all the types carefully. He must know which type he can use and which type appeals to the people who buy groceries. If he wrote advertising that only appealed to men, he would not get results from his efforts, but he must make his appeal directly to those who buy. After a careful study of the situation I have come to the conclusion that money spent on space used for snappy newsy items which bear an air of chattiness will bring business.. If a man can impart some information in his advertising that is not generally known, something that a person is likely to repeat he can feel sure that his advertising is being read.

A Catchy Title

The first thing is a catchy title, something that is suggestive of what follows and still a title that will arouse curiosity. For instance I wrote one advertisement that bore a title, (Why There Are No Jews In Aberdeen). Such a title immediately arouses the curiosity of everyone who reads the paper. It is like a connundrum it makes people think. If they have an answer they want to know if it is right. Whether they know or not they want to hear the other man's solution and so in this case they are lead to read the advertising which besides bearing the information, embodies the point that the advertiser wants to impress upon the public.

Linking Up Advertising

In this style of advertising it is important that there should be a natural link between the catchy item and the grocer's announcement. This is often hard to get, but two disconnected ideas do not go well together in one such copy even as in a paragraph of literary composition. The train of thought brought out in the title and in the first part of the advertisment must lead naturally to the point the advertiser has to make.

Unlimited Scope

There is an unlimited scope in such advertising. A well read man will have no difficulty in writing such a style of advertising, and there is a vast fund of material from which to choose. The English literature is full of all kinds of adaptable ideas. The dictionary too will suggest copy for advertising. The idea does not have to deal directly with the line of business to be advertised, in fact the value of the advertising is enhanced by the remoteness of the two ideas as long as the writer succeeds in logically connecting the two in his paragraph.

Advertising Successful

I have found my advertising most successful. I am sure it is read. Besides hearing comments on it from those who deal here I can see it in the response I get to the advertised lines each week.

Not Much Left

A housekeeper, going from home for the day, locked everything up, and for the grocer's benefit, wrote on a card:—

"All out—don't leave anything."

This she stuck under the knocker of the front door.

On her return she found her home ransacked, and all her choice possessions gone To the card on the door was added:—

"Thanks. We haven't left much."

"Keep on Advertising" Is Their Slogan

Wentzells, Halifax, N.S., believe in keeping their advertisement constantly before the public whether business is good or otherwise. A store well departmentized.

HALIFAX, N. S., (Special).—On being asked by a Canadian Grocer representative as to their system of advertising, the manager of the advertising department of Wentzells replied that although they did not have any definite system, different from any other grocery their slogan was, advertise, advertise. advertise. Whether business was exceptionally bright or not so bright, they kept on advertising. Wentzells are not advocates of the cash and carry idea, but have their delivery arranged to such a fine degree, that it is one of the most economical in the city. This delivery not only serves the city, but the the suburbs as well. Certain days are taken for the different points outside the city.

Educating Talks

The "Big Store" does not confine its advertising to special lines of goods. but carries on a series of educating talks on methods as to how the different departments are managed, and points out to the people that they are enabled by a large turnover to sell below smaller stores. Wentzells is not a store appealing to any particular class in this respect it is one of the most cosmopolitan stores in the city. All classes buy at the "Big Store."

Wentzells Limited is situated in the heart of Halifax. Every car line in the city passes its doors. The Tram Company realizing its central location, have established themselves in up-to-date offices in this building.

Many Departments

One of the reasons for the success of this large grocery house is the fact each department carrying its special that it is divided into many departments, line. There is the canned goods, the jams and preserves fruits, tea, coffee and cocoa departments, as well as many others. The clerks are not bothered with taking of telephone orders, as a special department looks after these orders. This is great convenience to the customer as well, who does not have to wait in giving an order over the telephone and gets information on prices without delay.

All these ideas and many others are set before the public, enlightening on the advantages of buying at the "Big Store", by systematic and constant advertising.

course that they are worthy of recommendation.

Meat and Groceries Sell Together

The meat department of the King Street east store was only taken over by the firm about a year and a half ago. It is splendidly equipped, and the meat business of this firm is a gratifying feature of the trade. It is a department that can be worked very satisfactorily along with groceries, as the customers for one, if service and satisfaction are given, can without much difficulty be turned to the other.

"The grocery business means a lot of hard work and constant application," Mr. Rivett commented. "It is in working hard avoiding losses through buying heavily, that success alone can be obtained."

GEORGIA PEACH CROP LARGE

The best peach crop in years is reported from Georgia, and the quality is of the finest. The first Georgia peaches are making their appearance in the middle western U. S. markets and the total crop is expected to run over 7,500 cars as against old estimates of 7,000 cars. Prices satisfactory to the grower and are reasonable in northern markets.

USE OF "SHORT BOX" FOR STRAWBERRIES IS NOT LIKELY

Ottawa, June 6.—The Government has shown itself unfriendly to the request that strawberry growers be allowed to use this year the "short box" instead of the one set by law. The short box does not contain as much as the standard.

J.A.C. Ethier (Laval and Two Mountains) maintained that many berries would go to waste for lack of boxes if the Government persisted that the standard box had to be used. Col. Currie (North Simcoe) backed him up, as did Hon. R. Lemieux.

Hon. S. F. Tolmie, Minister of Agriculture, could see no necessity, however, to relax this year. The law had been relaxed last year, and surely by this time the growers knew what was required.

There was no definite action decided upon, but the chances for "short boxes" do not look rosy.

Told Him First

Tom: "Rejected you, did she My boy, you've got to be clever in the proposing game. You should have told her you were unworthy of her."

Ned (lugubriously): "I was going to, but she told it to me first."—Boston Transcript.

WATCH THE SALES TAX

PROBABLY the greatest problem that the retail merchant is faced with today is, how to figure the sales tax. Certianly the merchant cannot be expected to take the tax cut of his own pocket as the profits are none to large at any time. The tax on the surface does not appear to be a large amount, but when figured on the year's turnover, the amount is a goodly sum. The only logical method then is to figure the tax in the cost of the goods and base the selling price on that. For instance, on five cases of canned peas at $1.65 per dozen the invoice would be figured at the above price with an additional 1½ per cent. or 25 cents Sales Tax, added as a separate charge. The peas therefore would cost $1.67½ cents per dozen and that is the only figure the selling price should be reckoned on.

SALESMANSHIP THE REMEDY

A MANUFACTURER recently remarked, "I can see no reason why sales should not be as large as in other years. Prices are down and on many articles as low as in 1914. Retail stocks are reduced to as low a point as possible, consistent with maintaining good service. But to bring back normal buying after the depression we have been experiencing, is going to be purely a matter of salesmanship, to get all the business available."

Between the years 1914 and well into the middle of 1920 when market values were advancing it was not difficult to sell goods.Business was easy to get, and it was more a matter of having sufficient quantity to meet the demand than a matter of sales ability. When values started to recede, consumers likewise commenced to curtail buying, believing that the next day would see even lower prices. Values did come down and apparently to a lower point than conditions warranted. The process has been costly to manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers alike. Liquidation of surplus stocks is about completed and a reaction has commenced to set in, particularly in primary markets on many lines of foodstuffs.

To bring back confidence to the consumer, it is plainly seen that the principal factor entering into the situation is going to be aggressive salesmanship. A little study and forethought will soon show where salesmanship can be made most effective. It may be the matter of giving more care to window displays, paying more attention to interior arrangement by moving the stock around in different positions and above all displaying seasonable goods attractively, at once suggesting and creating in the mind of the possible purchaser a desire to possess the goods.

A retail merchant stated that since the decline in butter prices, sales of butter jumped from 4,000 pounds per week to 7,000 pounds. This increase in butter sale is not caused by a desire to stock up for future requirements. It is going into consumption, thus bringing out the point that a greater consumption will materialize if the public is convinced that prices are now at a lower level. Although to a great extent, it was the lower prices that caused this merchant's butter sales to increase, nevertheless, it was genuine salesmanship that was the principal factor. Salesmanship and the prevailing lower prices will work hand in hand and are going to be essential measures in bringing back a saner and healthier condition of business.

EDITODIALS IN BRIEF

A badly wrapped package is a poor advertisement. A neatly wrapped package pleases the customer.

Use tact when a customer complains over the telephone. Try to see her point of view and a good customer can often be saved for the store.

You can't know too much about your business. Merchants can use their spare time to great advantage by studying their trade paper.

Some merchants guess at delivery costs. They guess as to which is the best clerk. They guess as to th condition of their credit business. They guess at value of their stock. They guess at a proper selling price. This habit of guessing is the main cause for thousands of failures. Accurate information is the big thing in business.

The merchant who is turning his stock over as frequently as possible is pursuing the wisest policy and is adopting a course that is almost sure to mean success. There should be no stock on your shelves that is not moving.

What the Union Printers Are Striking For

Why their demands cannot be granted. Employing printers can grant neither shorter hours nor higher wages, and the saner printers realize their union's demands are unreasonable.

It is common knowledge that the union printers in many towns and cities in Canada and the United States are on strike. For the first time in its 35 years history The MacLean Publishing Company is involved and we believe you will be interested in receiving a statement as to what the printer's unions are striking for and why their demands cannot be granted.

A year ago (although the wage agreement at that time had over a year to run) the Toronto Publishers and Master Printers gave their employees voluntarily a 10% advance in wages, making the minimum wage $35.20 for a 48-hour week. This was given in recognition of the fact that living costs were then advancing. This voluntary agreement for $35.20 a week expired June 1st. Notwithstanding that the cost of living has declined 22% since March 1920, the printers' union demanded a 44 Hour week and a wage of $44.00. This means four hours per week less work and an increase in rate of pay per hour of over 33⅓%. Employing printers can grant neither shorter hours nor higher wages and the saner printers realize that their union's demands are unreasonable. A large percentage of our own men did not want a strike, but the union leaders in the United States have ordered it and the strike is on.

Negotiations have been carried on for months. The employing printers have been tireless in their efforts to bring about a settlement without a strike. They are now engaged in a fight, not only for their existence but for a principle in which every business man is interested. If the unions secure their unreasonable demands then the fight would surely be carried to other industries. Business men with whom we have discussed the matter have been most emphatic in urging us to take a most determined stand. "Stay with it and we'll stand with you", they say.

And so we shall "carry on". We shall be somewhat handicapped, especially at first there may be occasions when you can extend your co-operation and support and we feel that we can count on you. It is our intention to issue our publications regularly and as promptly as possible. There will be difficulties to be overcome, and for a short term our service may not be up to its usual high standard. If, therefore, your publication does not reach you on time, if we have to repeat a former advertisement, if proofs are not submitted, or if we fall short of full efficiency in any way, we ask your kind indulgence. We are fighting for greater efficiency at a critical juncture in the world's history, and your co-operation and moral support will help.

Better to Keep to the One System

Subscriber asks the advisability of running two kinds of business in one store. Another reader seeks analysis of his statement

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

THIS comes from a subscriber.

Dear Sir:— We are doing a business of $56,000 a year, general merchandise, drive routes and give credit. From this meagre description would you say that five men were to many for conduct of business — three clerks, two partners? Would you think the business large enough to keep one man employed keeping books, buying and managing?

If my friend will look over the story I wrote last week, the tale of two men who conduct a business of the size mentioned, also general merchandise, he can get a pretty good slant on what I think.

Yet the information is "meagre" as he says it is. There may be modifying factors which do not appear in his letter. Still, he does use two words which are illuminating — "drive routes." If there are two routes, probably there is one for two men thereon. If three, then three may be needed. This is unless the routes absorb only part time. A business of that character costs much more to run than one wherein such extra service is not included. The plan then must be to get margin to cover and leave a profit and over.

Really, I believe I am entitled to further details. I think you should tell me margin you made in 1920, what actual stock you carry, what average net you figured you made — what you derive from the routes that you really had left as net earnings, I mean what your expense account is, in detail and as you figure the percentage. Indicate also what advantage you feel not accrue to if you did not drive at them at all.

I suggest you write this stuff after you have read the review I have just written of the other store I mention. Maybe then I can help you with some intelligence. Of course, your communication will be kept in confidence.

Cash & Carry With Service Combined

Another writes me from the far northwest.

Have you ever known a business carried on in same manner as cash & carry stores having delivery service in addition for which a per cent, say five is charged on all orders delivered, said charge being added to each order?

I advise very strongly against attempting such a combination except under certain restricted conditions. Let us recall Charles Slack, one of the most successful Chicago's grocers of thirty years ago, almost wrecked his business by putting a direct charge on to his customers' accounts for certain specific services. This is a good example, because Slack's customers were not of those who cared much about prices — they would pay practically any figures he asked. What hit them wrong and stuck in their craws was the direct charge. It's "agin human nature," Canadian nature particularly.

Much more recently, another man had some 35 stores in a certain city — 35 flourishing stores. He took a notion to fix prices on a spot cash basis and charge for credit and deliveries as separate items. He wrecked his business so completely that he was compelled to liquidate it. I think he says the experiment cost him $25,000 and that he was fifteen years ahead of times" with his ideas. Therein I think he is not right.

I have observed that men who approach this problem the other way round are more apt to get by with it. Here the plan is to fix prices on a full service basis, then make concessions for what service is not taken. Thus goods priced at a certain level are subject to a discount of, say, three per cent if no delivery is taken, and another two or three per cent if they are paid in- can stand concessions, but not direct stead of being charged. Human nature charges.

But I notice also that stores which are started on this basis are apt to gravitate very shortly to one plan. Mostly they go back to full service, full margin basis, because, after all, most people prefer to get service and pay for it, except in rare instances and some localities.

War Conditions Not Now Operative

When the proprietor of these 35 stores said that he was fifteen years too soon, the war was on . Thus he judged that folks ha come to his way of thinking But that condition was temporary, not permanent. Everywhere it is now found that customers demand as much service as ever, and are readier than ever to pay the price needful to secure service. They had enough of the war economies I believe this is not that we are such lovers of useless luxuries as that we found by experiment that the grocer can can do the work ourselves—that it takes render service more cheaply than we more time for us to save by doing for ourselves than it is worth. Hence, it is true economy for us to hire the grocer to do it for us. And why ot? Is the grocer not a specialist in his line and is the specialist not better equipped than the occasional, amateur servitor — you and me.

Cash and carry is conducted by service grocers when the two departments are absolutely distinct and separate. One big grocer in the West whose service, old-fashioned store did $200.000 in 1920, opened a self-serve basement store a year or two ago and did $80,000 therein in 1920. But the two kept entirely separate. If the customers buy downstairs, she selects her own goods, pays cash for them and carries them home. If she wants service — and she can get it if she desires it—she must give her order up stairs,pay full service prices, and then, if her credit is good, she can have the goods charged.

Changes in This Grocery

Against that stand the experience of another Grocery Co. It is an old institution which was founded on the full service basis and always has been successful. Within the last ten or a dozen years, it opened three branches which were run on the cash basis and, during the war, were converted into non-delivery stores, except that orders of a given sum were delivered free and any delivery could be made for a fixed charge.

With the reaction of the after-the-war conditions, the service store has forged ahead and the others fallen behind to such an extent that the branches are now being sold off, and the concern will devote itself entirely to the one big central store—one of the handsomest in the country, by the way—to giving the best possible in goods and service for an adequate charge.

It is true that strictly cash and carry stores run along with a delivery adjunct based on the charge of ten cents, or so, per delivery. I know another man who conducts a business in this way. But it will be noted that he arranges for a specific charge of so many cents—not a percentage. In fact, deliveries are made, I believe, by boys for their own account and that he really has no direct connection with that service. But look again and it will be noted that this chain of stores is primarily and preponderatingly non-delivery. All the goods that are delivered might remain on the shelves and the business would not be perceptibly affected.

Any grocer who has a business established on certain lines should think long before he does anything that may disrupt it, and nothing is so apt to jar it seriously as a radical alteration of its system. Look carefully into any plan before you plunge. Business is sensitive at best. Think not only of what you may win by taking the chance but of what you are rather certain to lose.

If I have not covered all the ground you have in mind, write again. I want

Will Discuss Many Vital Questions

Annual convention of Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association in Quebec next week promises to be an interesting event. Sir Henry Drayton will likely address the gathering—the entertainment features.

THE Third Annual Convention of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association opens in Quebec on Monday, June 13th and continues on the 14th. The convention headquarters are at the Chateau Frontenac where all the sessions will be held.

Subjects For Discussion

Among some of the subjects which will be discussed are:— Future Contracts, Drop Shipments, Free Deals, Sales of Extracts and Essences, Provincial Acts should be uniform, The Manufacturers' Agent and Grocery Brokers' position in relation to wholesale Grocer, The position of the Wholesale Grocer in regard to distributing Proprietory Lines, and How Should Wholesale Grocers meet the rising percentage of expense.

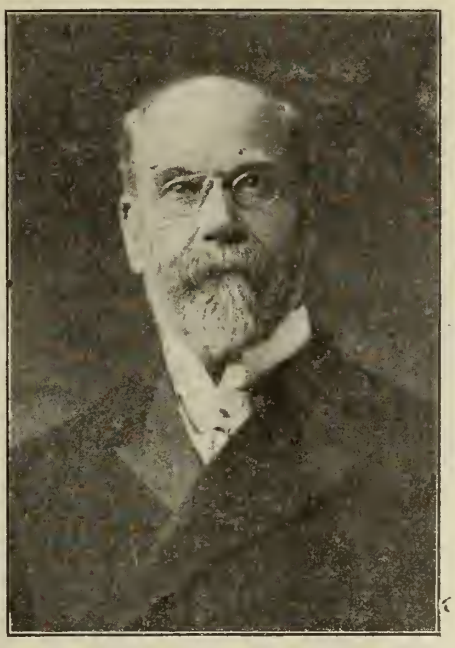
Sir Henry Drayton to Speak

It is expected that Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance will address the convention also Fred. Mason, President of the American Specialty Manufacturers Association. O. J. Moore Vice-President, National Wholesale Grocers' Association, and John G. Clarke, President Michigan Wholesale Grocers' Association.

Programme of Entertainment

The Quebec Wholesale Grocers have planned an extensive programme of entertainment including an informal dinner at the Kent Montmorency Falls and a reception at Spencerwood the residence of the Lieut.-Governor.

A large number of ladies are accompanying the delegates and special arrangements have also been made for their entertainment. The Ontario and Western Wholesale Grocers are proceeding to the convention by boat from Toronto. It is expected that fully 80 or 100 will leave Toronto on Saturday afternoon, June 11 by C. S. Line and will arrive in Quebec early Monday morning.



HUGH BLAIN of Eby-Blain Co., wholesale grocer, Toronto, and president of Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association who will preside at the Convention.

GEO. M. MITCHELL, Secretary, Quebec Wholesale Grocers' Association, who is working hard to make this year's convention on of the best.

to get it all in and be really helpful to the utmost extent.

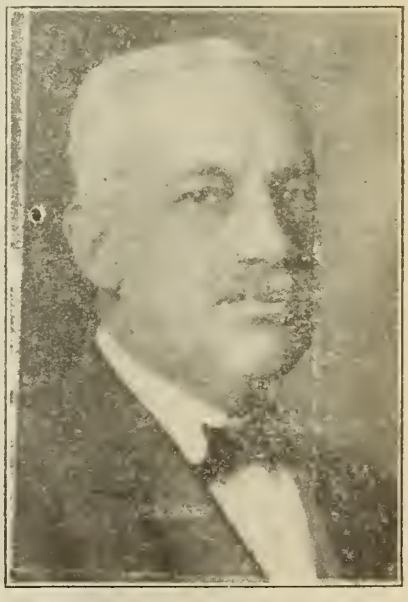
The Ghost Will Not Down!

..Verily, it is impossible to lay Banquo's Ghost! Hardly do I finish exposition of the whys and therefores for margin computation on the sale and cost when another inquiry comes along. Here is the gist of another:

At the bottom of it all, what difference does it make which way you figure as long as you come out with the same amount? If I buy an article for $1.00 and sell it for $1.25 I am making 25 per cent on my cost and 20 per cent on my selling and either way I figure I have the same amount of money in hand at the end of the transaction. Of the hundreds of merchants that I have talked with I do not remember of one who figures his profit, or gross profit rather, other than on his actual cost price.

Absolutely, it makes no difference whatever on which end you figure so long as you figure every factor correctly. The point is that, in business, we do not begin with the cost and add a margin merely. We have to know what the expense and other burdens added together amount to on any given article; and those burdens always are computed on the sale. Try it any way you like and see if they are not.

Suppose, then, that you find these to to be 31 per cent. They are on sales and if turned around on to cost the figure would read 44, 927 plus—you'd have to pay 45 per cent. to be right and safe. Then wanting to get nine per cent. on sales for profit, you would have to add a fantastic fraction like 9.89 cents plus, or 9.9 per cent.—and all the time you would have to figure on sales to get to the cost basis with accuracy. Is it not simpler to figure burdens at 31 and profit at 9. 40 per cent. total all on sales, and know from the start where you are going ? That is one phase of the argument. There are hundreds of others.



A. C. PYKE, Secretary of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, who has been untiring in his efforts to make this year's convention a success.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MONTREAL, June 8. — The feature of the grocery market this week is the upset condition of the sugar market. Wholesalers have been cutting the prices below the refiners' list and now the raw market shows weakness with lower prices in the United States on refined and lower prices are expected here. Molasses is one cent a gallon lower on this market but corn syrups and starches show added strength. There is a good demand for fresh vegetables and fruits. Lemons are advanced in price and oranges and grapefruit are firm. There is no change in canned goods prices. The rice market shows more strength with expectations of higher prices locally. The cereal market is quiet with prices unchanged. The tea and coffee markets are unchanged. There is no change in spices. Nuts and dried fruits are strong with a scarcity of raisins and higher prices quoted. Self-raising four is lower in price. Package cereals are quite due to the summer season.

Coffee Unchanged

Montreal.

COFFEE.—The coffee market is steady with no change in prices.

Shortage of Canned Peas

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS.—There is no change in canned goods. Prices are steady with a good demand for all lines of canned vegetables. It is reported that locally the stocks of canned peas are low and as a result there is added strength to the quoted price. On the other hand the supplies on imported canned peas are arriving and will likely fill in the demand.

Montreal.

SUGAR.—The sugar market is upset and while refiners list price on granulated sugar is unchanged, the local wholesalers ar quoting a lower figure and some retailers are selling as low as 10¼ cents per pound. Lower prices are expected in the refiners' market on account of the weakness of the raw market and lower prices in the United States.

The first Georgia peaches are offered at $5.50 per box and California cherries are 50 cents per box lower. There is a good demand for all lines of fruit and prices are strong.

The supply of fresh vegetables on the market is improved with an equally good demand. Florida tomatoes are reduced to $6.00 per crate. Cabbage and cucumbers are unchanged in price. On account of the short supply of cucumbers, the cost of importations, etc., a lower price is not expected until the domestic supply is on the market.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 8.—Although there are few price changes, the markets generally speaking have a steadier undertone, with a tendency on the part of wholesalers to stick more in line with manufacturers' lists. This condition to a certain extent has been brought about by the application of the Sales Tax. The sugar market is in an uncertain condition and with a downward trend, there is likely to be a reduction in prices, although nothing can be said with definitness as to what will materialize within the next few weeks. Teas and coffees continue to occupy a strong position, likewise rices, shelled almonds and walnuts. Canned tomatoes are inclined to be scarce with quotations firmly held. Dried fruits are firm with a scarcity on apricots. Stocks of raisins and currants are not large but the demand at this season is comparatively small

Coffee Shows Strength

Toronto.

COFFEE.—The coffee market has a decidedly strong tone with prices in primary markets advanced and a tendency on the part of holders to hold back supplies awaiting a higher price. Spot quotations, however, are unchanged, but the situation is a strong one and the tendency is that higher prices will prevail before the year is out.

Tomatoes Becoming Scarce

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—There is a scarcity noted on canned tomatoes with prices holding firm. Corn and peas are steady, but pumpkin, owing to the light pack the past season, is in scant supply at higher quotations. There is little call for fruits and in consequence prices are irregular according to how bad wholesalers wish to clear up their stocks. Brunswick sardines are down to $5.10 per case. Western Shore brand Tuna fish is offered at $3.75 per dozen and Van Camps soups at $1.40 per dozen.

Raisins Stock Low

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS.—Prunes continue to hold the higher level reached a couple of weeks ago and with the European export demand continuing to improve they are likely to continue occupying the higher position. Apricots in primary markets are scarce, in fact are practically impossible to procure. Spot sup ies of apricots are not large and American buyers are looking to this side the line for supplies. Recently a car apricots that was held in bond was shipped to the United States at a price which brought the holder seven cents per pound more than the price quoted to the wholesalers one month ago. Raisins supplies are becoming low, but this is not alarming as the majority of houses only desire to carry sufficient stock to carry them until the next crop which is expected to bring considerably lower prices than the past season. Currant stocks are not large on spot and in Grecian shipping ports they are considered to be the lowest for several years. Quotations on spot are unchanged.

FRUIT.—The feature of the fruit markett is the steadily advancing price on lemons. California lemons are quoted at $8.50 to $9.00 pr case and the supply is limited. Practically the last car of grapefruit for the season arrived during the week and is selling at $6.50 per case for all sizes. Georgia paches in six baskt crates are offered at $5.50 per crate. Toronto.

RICES.—Further strength has developed in the rice market under active buying for European export. Increased consumption has also had a stimulating effect on the market with the result that Southern rices have advanced one cent per pound. SPICES.—In primary markets the feature appears to be the steadily increasing strength to peppers with prices advancing. Gingers are firm under light stocks. There is a scarcity of cassia and supplies are being bought as quickly as offered. Sugar Market Uncertain

Toronto.

SUGAR.—As far as the local situation is concerned there is no change in the situation. Wholesalers continue to quote below the refiners' list and refiners also continue to hold their prices firm and unchanged. The raw market has developed an easier tone during the week with prices lower. There appears to be an uncertain tone to the market and nothing can be stated with definiteness what will materialize within tthe next few weeks.

Fine Teas Scarce and Higher

Toronto.

TEAS.—Importers are experiencing more and more difficulty in procuring fine grade Ceylon teas even at the prevailing higher prices, apparently this grade of teas are pretty well cleaned up. Advices from Calcutta state that Indias are being clared off quicker than expected and even the poorer grades are somewhat strengthened in values. Although the Japan tea market opened about 25 per cent. lower than last year on first pickings, local quotations are not expected to change to any great extent for the reason that importers last year sold Japans at practically 20 cents per pound less than import price, consequently the lower values on this season crop will be on a parity with present quotations to the retail trade.

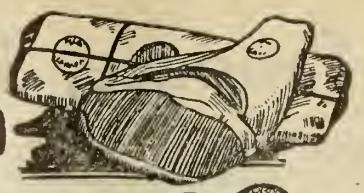
PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS



C. Salmon Packers Take Action To Protect Name of B. C. Salmon

Putrid fish, alleged to have been spirited away from Seattle to avoid destruction is shipped from Vancouver to Singapore

ANCOUVER (Special).—A few months ago it was reported in nadian Grocer that some thirteen usand cases of canned salmon which been condemned in Seattle had been ught in scows to Vancouver and stored bond. The authorities knew all about shipment and the canners here had ermined that nothing should be done h the sub-standard canned fish that uld in any reflect on the B. C. product. t was learned that the Blue Funnel ier "Teucer" was about to leave ncouver for Singapore with a shipnt of 500 cases of this salmon aboard nsigned to Kirsten & Co.

Shipment Inspected

The whole shipment had been inspect- and the certificates read as follows: "One lot of 10,620 cases, labelled "Kay Square Brand" was described by analysis for the United States Government as, "to consist in part of decomposed salmon," another lot of 2,993 cases was described as "to consist in part of decomposed salmon," and the third lot of 446 cases, labelled 'Horizon Brand Red Salmon' was described by the inspectors as " to consist in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed and putrid animal substance."

In order that the consignees in Singapore might not construe from the shipping port and the British Boat that the salmon was of B.C. origin, J. A. Motherwell, chief inspector of Fisheries sent complete history, and copy of inspection certificates to the Chief Inspector of Customs at Singapore. It is expected that the shipment will receive sufficient advertising at the other end to have the desired effect.

GREAT CANNED MILK TRADE

The total volume of international trade in condensed milk in 1919 is at least six times as great as in 1913, according to the figures issued by the U. S. Bureau of Markets which comments upon the enormous increase in this trade since before the war. While the 1920 world trade diminished slightly, it is still far in excess of that in 1913. European supply and demand are gradually recovering, and more normal sources of demand in the far east and tropical regions are being developed. From an exportable surplus of 15,000,000 lbs. in 1913, the country's excess of export expanded to the enormous quantity of 836,000,000 lbs. During the single month of June, 1919, the United States exported 114,835,626 lbs. of condensed and evaporated milk, a quantity several times greater than the total exports for any entire year prior to the war.

Slicer at Front of Store Increases The Sales of Cooked Meats

Story of progress of R. Thompson, in British Columbia, is one of an interesting experience. Now has good store and ice cream parlor.

FOR selling cooked meats only, A. J. Lambert, grocer at King and Sherman Streets, Hamilton, Ont. has a meat slicer right up at the front of his store, situated on the counter. He states that its location has meant a great deal in the way of increased sales of cooked meats. Mr. Lambert just opened his business at this corner last February, and his trade has been very satisfactory to date. He has a fresh meat department also in connection with his grocery, but cooked meats are not sold in it.

Are Tempted to Buy

People are attracted by the slicer at the front of the store, according to the manager, and he says that very often people who have come in to buy other things are tempted to buy some cooked ham or tongue just from seeing the slicer and the ham on it. That sales have been increased in this way, there is no doubt. Mr. Lambert has a splendid meat department, and it is kept in first-class condition, all fresh meats being very attractively and temptingly shown. Groceries and meats, he declares, can be worked very well together, and he finds the customers for one are very often customers for the other. Mr. Lambert is best known in Hamilton as being connected with the meat trade, and he has a meat market in another part of the city. In his new store groceries have been added, and in his sales of meats the tunover in groceries has been very materially helped.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

MONTREAL, June 8. — The feature of the produce market is the fluctuation in the price of butter. The market strengthened up early last week but on account of a falling off in the demand for export dropped back to a weaker market. Eggs are strong although the receipts how an increase . The demand is sufficient to take all available supplies. The hog market remains firm on account of a shortage of light weight on this market. There is a good demand for smoked and cooked meats and prices are unchanged. Barrelled pork is lower in price with only a small demand for the local trade. Fresh lake fish is scarce and prices hold. Lard is still in a weak condition. due to large offerings and lower price on hogs. The cheese market is unchanged with new cheese still ni a weak condition.

This, coupled with the fact that the hog market is declining, emphasizes the weakness of the lard market. Prices are unchanged this week.

EDDY'S Matches and EDDY'S Indurated Fibreware are known to everybody, everywhere in Canada.

With most people, to think of Matches is to think of EDDY'S. The Eddy name to them is a symbol of that Match quality which some seventy years of match-making experience has made possible.

EDDY'S Indurated Fibreware Utensils are equally popular—and deservedly so. Lighter than wood and more durable than metal, they are ideal for household or farm use. Leak-proof, bulge-proof, rust-proof.

TARIFF BILL HITS CATTLE TRADE

The increased tariff which the United States has placed on shipments to Canadian cattle has tended to aggravate the uncertianty which has marked the live stock trde for sometimes past. The falling off in consumption, consequent upon the warm weather and the lower prices prevailing on the overseas trade, has somewhat demoralized the market. This condition combined with the higher American tariff has brought about the worst conditions seen for years and the prospects are they will become worse. Prices in Toronto have been higher than those prevaiing across the border for sometime past and the conditions now apparent here were felt by the American farmers some months ago. Farmers are more or less panicky and are eendeavoring to get their cattle to the market before a lower price basis is reached.

For sometime past the hog market has been in a declining position and indications are not lacking that value will continue downward. This condition is reflected on all hog products such as lard, shortening and cured meats all of which have indications for lower price levels.

More Speed - -A New Gear

for

Ford Truck

THE 7-1 Standard Worm-Gear used exclusively on the Ford Truck was designed for carrying heavy loads under all conditions. It has proved entirely satisfactory.

Experience has shown, however, that owners operating on smooth country roads or city pavements with light bulky loads often desire to operate at a speed of over 15 miles per hour.

To meet this condition we have designed a new gear which permits greater road speed without undue increase of engine speed. Equipped with the new gear your Ford Truck will develop a speed of from 20-25 miles per hour.

The New 5-1 Gear is now optional equipment on all Ford Trucks, or can be obtained from Ford Dealers and Service Stations for Ford Trucks now in operation.

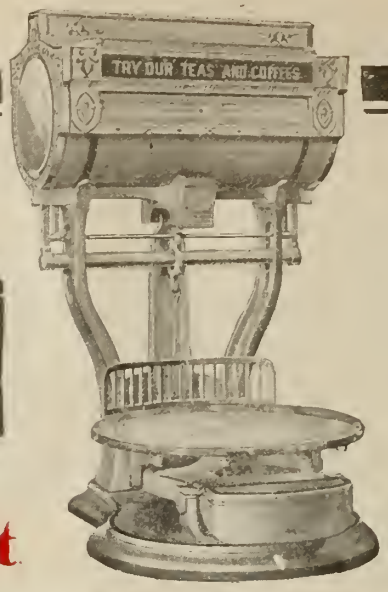
Two Scales in One

DAYTON



A gentle push swings it "right about face"

Would you waste the time of the customer you are serving and the customer who is waiting to be served, as well as your own time, by walking the full length of the counter and back again —— would you do this, not once, but many times a day, if —— you could swing the scale around to face you while you are selling goods ON THE OUTSIDE OF THE COUNTER?

If you have on your counter the low-platform Dayton, you can do this—— but not otherwise.

The ball-bearing swivel base, which is one of the Dayton's Exclusive time and money-saving features, will not only permit you to weigh goods easily on either side of the counter, but it will do much more.

IF IT'S A DAYTON, IT'S RIGHT

It will enable you to swing the Scale toward the best light in the Store.

The Dayton fairly bristles with exclusive features, which are the product of the finest of workmanship, design and materials, plus the experience of the great pioneer scale-manufacturing house over a period of thirty years.

HOW IT LOOKS TO WOMEN BUYERS

The Housewife of today is a business woman. In choosing her grocer she uses business judgment — and she knows that she saves her time and assures herself of exact weights by buying at the store with the Daytons on the counter.

The Reason for Macdonald's Supremacy

-- is not advertising, though advertising has had much to do with constantly increasing sale of Macdonald's Tobacco. The reason for Macdonald leadership in Canada to-day lies in the satisfaction that smokers find in "the tobacco with a heart."

And the reason for Macdonald's popularity with the retailer is this same satisfaction—plus the unusually high percentage of profit to be found in Macdonald's Tobacco a profit further increased by the rapid turnover and the correspondingly small amount of capital involved.

*Cheer up! Better Times are Coming

You are finding things a bit better all the time? Sure you are. They're not coming with a rush. Nobody will admit that, but we find the tone much better, and if we do, you should, too, because we cannot be doing business unless you merchants are. April was better than March, and May was ahead of April, not as far ahead as we wanted it to be but far enough to give us a world of encouragement.

We've still got to work hard, though, to find ways and means of getting our way. Aside from the quality of the tea, goods like RED ROSE TEA offer the best share of business, haven't we? Package the package is one of the hardest working salesmen you've got. Make it work for you every minute. A nice window display of RED ROSE packages will attract sales, and a showcase will answer the same purpose, too.

Other merchants are adding to their sales in this way, and so can you.

It will bring better times to you more quickly.

Good Epuipment Soon Pays For Itself

A bright store systematically arranged makes the grocery business a pleasure, according to C. J. Whyte, proprietor of Ayrshire Grocery, Verdun, Que. Delivery system a necessity.

Montreal (Special).—Situated on the banks of the St. Lawrence River and forming the south-west border of the City of Montreal is the rapidly growing city of Verdun. Since this city has streets and street car service in common with the metropolis, it is commonly considered a district of Montreal. Verdun is distinguished by its rapidly growing population of English, Irish and Scotch people. This fact has had a marked effect upon its business places, and it is particularly noticeable in Whyte's Ayrshire Grocery, owned and managed by C. J. Whyte, a Scotchman who has had many years of grocery experience in Glasgow, Scotland.

A Clean Cut Store

Mr. Whyte has named his store after his birthplace in Scotland and has carried the idea throughout the store. Both the exterior and the interior are painted white.

There are two front entrances and three large display windows, each of which is devoted to a particular branch of the store. The floor space is large, being almost as wide as it is deep, and as the ceilings are high and everything in the interior is white, it gives a very spacious and airy appearance to the store. The floor space allows for four rows of counters, one along each side and two in the centre with wide isles between them all. The left hand side of the store is devoted to grocery lines such as canned goods, package goods, cereals, flour and meals. The centre block handles pastries, cooked meats and confections, while on the right hand side of the store is a large refrigerator and glass enclosed meat counters for the butcher department.

Refrigerator a Silent Salesman

The refrigerator is so placed that the glass front, which is arranged like a show case, faces the door. At night the refrigerator is carefully dressed so that the cuts of meat hanging in the refrigerator are visible from the street. In this way the refrigerator acts as a silent salesman and as Mr. Whyte says, "I as certainly done much to increase the sales of meat." He claims that particularly in the meat department the display and the cleanliness of the surroundings are the chief factors in the sale.

Operates His Own Bakery

There is an extensive pastry and confectionery department in the store which carries all lines of cookies, cakes and buns, all of which are made on the premises. Immediately behind the grocery store, and in fact under the same roof, is a fair sized, clean, bright bakery, where three bakers are employed not only in making the pastry, but in preparing all kinds of cooked meats including roasts, cooked hams and meat pies. "Not only has my bakery increased my direct profits in that line," said Mr. White to Canadian Grocer's representative, "but it has brought me many new customers who like the home-cooked lines. It has proven quite a drawing card and a great satisfaction to myself to be able to oversee the preparation of the lines I am selling in my store, and know that I am giving my customers the very best quality of everything."

Good Fixtures Easily Pay

This gives an added interest to the business and in fact makes it a veritable hobby. When a man can feel that way about his business and his work it makes success much easier. A man then does not mind spending money on fixtures and on improvements because then he not only sees the results it brings in a bigger business, but it gives him a personal pleasure in the improved appearance of his store. The fixtures that are installed in a store both for the sake of utility and appearance readily pay for themselves by building up sales both directly and indirectly. Under the improved conditions, with the best facilities for handling goods, the grocer and his staff find a joy in the work. The better the appearance of the store, the more interest will those employed in the store take in the business. The surroundings have a lot to do with the temperament of those who must daily come in contact with the customers and as a result the more satisfaction and service will the customers get, all of which goes to build up the business."

Illustrating the Whyte Ayrshire store in Montreal, the top picture showing window displays, while the two lower photographs are interior views.

Gets Quick Turn-Over

Mr. Whytle states that his turn-over for last year was $130,000. The sales for the first week in May amounted to over $1300. Every sale is cash and the aim of the management is a quick turn-over. Speaking of this Mr. Whyte said, "It is most important especially at these times when prices are on the downward trend that the grocer should arrange his affairs so that he will have a quick turnover. Competition is very keen. Profits are small and the grocer needs every advantage that the market offers if he would not lose money. Then, too, he needs the cash and I have found that it is just as easy to get the cash as to carry accounts. I have a delivery system, two rigs, and these I find indispensable to the business. I am not afraid of the cash and carry plan. It cannot be a universal success. The grocer must deliver, but if he would not have his business cut by those who cut prices on the cash and carry plan, he must systematize his business, feature quality and service, and make buying at his store a habit with his customers."

Sells Ice Cream in Bricks

This grocery has developed a good trade for ice cream in bricks. Mr. Whyte believes that it is a desert that is both inexpensive and handy and on these grounds has recommended it to his customers. He expresses the opinion that it is a line that rightfully belongs to the grocery trade and that a grocer can profitably handle it.

Suggesting Lines Very Often Means Sales

W. J. Hobson, of W. J. Hobson Co., Ltd., Hamilton, believes that equipment that displays goods, suggests foods to people that frequently result in sales—a store attractively arranged and equipped increases trade.

HOBSON, & CO., King Street, West, Hamilton. Ont., early this spring, moved into the new premises, just along the street a short distance from where they were formerly located. The new store represents one of the finest. It is splendidly equipped, every convenience conducive to service to the public being provided, and the attractive appearance of the store makes shopping a delight and a pleasure. Goods well displayed are half sold is an old, old saying and one well known to the average retailer. In the Hobson store it is carried out to the letter, for merchandise is here so well displayed that it cannot fail to attract the eye of the customer. Anything that suggests a line to a person is worth while, according to W. J. Hobson the proprietor. Patented bins, counter displays, table displays, silent saleman, all sell goods, in his opinion. For instance across the fronts of the same very often in the case of a patented bin, the name of the commodity contained in letters suggests this food to the customer, and frequently results in a sale. This undoubtedly is one of the valuable points in bins of this kind, apart altogether from their advantage from the standpoint of cleaniness. Int these receptacles goods are always kept in the very best of condition, and one is assured of proper sanitation. "Equipment of this nature makes stock always presentable to the public," remarked Mr. Hobson, "and of course where goods are presented to the people in a clean attractive condition, it invariably means increased sales.

Counters are arranged down both sides of this store, and at the rear of them are handsome wall fixtures that lend themselves to attractive displays. In the centre of each wall is a large mirror, on either side of which are pilars. The woodwork in these fixtures is in quarter cut oak finish, giving a rich and elegent appearance to the entire store. To the right and at the farther end of the counter on this side, is a refrigerator display counter, that Mr. Hobson had installed in the new store, and which he did not posses in his former premises. It is in two compartments but unlike most counters of this kind, there is no centre section for ice. The refrigerator is conducted from a system of five large drums or pipes opening into the compartments at each end of the counter. These pipes are packed in brine of chopped ice and salt, and in this way the cooling is maintained at a uniform temperature, keeping cooked meats and produce lines in first class condition.

Sales of Cooked Meats Increase

"Since I have had that refrigerator counter my sales of cooked meats have increased 25 per cent," Mr. Hobson told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "The fact that we can display our cooked meats all the time, certainly means increased sales. Customers in the store are attracted by a nice showing of cooked ham or tongue and are tempted to buy. In the hot weather we have sold as many as twenty-five hams a week, and with a refrigerator display counter that number is already showing an increase."

Sales of cheese are also on a large scale in Mr. Hobson's store, and this firm has built up a reputation for cheese that means a great deal in the weekly turnover. Mr. Hobson stated that on an average, he sold five cheese a week, as they are completed are placed in apart altogether from sales of package cheese and certain other special kinds.

The Fish Department

The fish department represents splendid facilities for service. It is at the rear of the store with a separate entrance from the street. The display window here is a large one, and is espicially adapted for the display of fish. Glass enclosed counters, too, render it possible to show the fish at the very best advantage. The fish section is complete in every detail, and affords every convenience for the handling of large quantities of all kinds of fish. All fish is received in the basement directly under the department, and is prepared for the counters. While business in fish is inclined to be a little slow just at this season, later on Mr. Hobson is anticipating an increased turnover, as a result of the improved arrangements for handling stock, and giving the best service to the public.

A Systematic Delivery

Delivery is worked out on a systematic basis, and all orders are assembled in a room for that purpose, adjoining the fish department. The drivers never enter the main store. The trucks are loaded from the side entrance direct direct from the assembling room. Only goods sold at the counter to be taken away by the custmer, are parcelled in the main store. Telephone orders, which form a large part of the trade of Hobson & Co., are filled in the assembling room. The shelves in this room are filled with all the staple lines, and only the specialties, as it were, are brought from the front part. The orders as they are completed are placed in Illustrating the New Store of W. J. Hobson & Co., Ltd., on King Street, W. Hamilton, Ontario. The upper left hand picture shows one side of the store and splendid advantages here for the display of goods. The arrangements is very inviting, and has meant increased sales. On the right hand side is also an attractive display both on the counter and shelves. wire baskets, and are taken in them from the store to the customer. Mr. Hobson through the week has three trucks, and an extra one is used on Saturdays. Four deliveries are given each day. Mr. Hobson believes in giving every service possible to his customers, and is of the opinion that people are appreciative of the same, to the extent that they show a willingness to buy goods where this special attention in the deliveries can be obtained. People of course cannot expect to have this service for nothing, and in Mr. Hobson's opinion, as prices rapidly return to normal, they will again demand this service more than ever and will not be so ready to carry home their goods.

Selling Specialties

Hobson & Co. sell a great many high-grade specialties in the way of foodstuffs, and have built up a reputation for selling only top quality goods. New lines that come on the market, providing they are sufficient merit to warrant it, are introduced in the Hobson store. Demonstrations are frequently held, and in the new store special arrangements have been made for space for demonstrating purposes. A good many lines owe something of their popularity to the selling efforts of Mr. Hobson an his sales staff. These lines as a rule show a good margin, and Mr. Hobson finds it profitable to boost them.

Weakness Prevails In Raw Sugar Market and Decline Is Likely

Increasing weakness is prevailing in the raw sugar markets for the past two weeks, all expectations of prices advancing in sympathy with the increase in duty have been frustrated. Shortly after the Emergency Tarift Bill was signed, when it was expected that the duty paid value would be advanced sixty points, the market took a sudden turn in the opposite direction, declining from 5.06 cents to 4.95 cents for Cubas, followed by Porto Ricos at 4.89 cents and later to 4.85 cents all on one day and on succeeding days the market further declined to 4.77 cents, then to 4.63 and later to 4.50 cents and since when one lot of full duty sugars has been sold at 4½ cents duty paid and at the same time we hear of a sale of 3,000 bags of Czecho—Slovak cubes at 4.15 cents basis 96 test on regular raw sugar terms. This, however, is a forced sale, holders becoming tired of holding in store and is therefore no criterion of the market.

Stocks in Cuban shipping ports continue heavy, but the rainy weather keeping up without cessation has resulted in the closing down of many factories at the end of last week, which left only 53 central factories in operation which indicates 145 factories having closed out of the total number operating this season. There has been a cessation of declines in American refined, from 6.60 to 6 cents.

Canadian refined sugar prices dropped 50 cents per hundred on the 13th and two days later made a further decline of 25 cents per hundred, bringing the price to $9.75 Montreal basis. Previous to these declines, the refiners list prices were purely nominal, as we understand there was no first hand business transpiring and refiners reported sales exceptionally slow.

Credit File Eliminates Posting Up At Night

"I haven't had to do any posting up at night since I installed this credit file," remarked Hugh Stephens, a grocer at Collingwood, Ont., to Canadian Grocer Representative the other day. "It keeps a complete record of all accounts, and the customer is kept informed each day as to her account, and knows exactly from day to day, what she owes me. It save so much time and worry that it has been well worth the money invested in it. Before I got it, I used to have to post up all the accounts each night, and this credit file eliminates all the work. It is accurate, too. We do a very large credit business in Collingwood, accounts being all of the better class of trade, and as far as bad debts are concerned, they are practically nil. I have only had this credit file a year, but I would not care to part with it now."

Doctor, my husband is taking up golf. Do you think he ought to eat meat?

A little link sausage won't hurt him.

Sales of Gasoline Mean Sales of Other Lines

Many grocers and general merchants are now selling gasoline and making it profitable, not so much from the sale of gasoline but because it usually means selling other groceries.

THE fact that many grocers and general merchants are selling gasoline and making a success of it, is much in evidence when one takes a trip along the many highways and byways of this Dominion.

The mere selling of gasoline, however, does not end the transaction. The purchasers of gasoline are often induced to enter the store and make other purchasers—a purchase that in all probability would never have been made except under the circumstances of stopping at that particular store for gas.

Window Displays Count

Many merchants who sell gasoline pay special attention to the windows, keeping them scrupulously clean and trimmed with seasonable lines that at once are attractive and inviting to the passing autos. The sales to motors do not always total a large amount, but in the aggregate, it is a goodly sum at the end of the season and the merchant who is taking every advantage to get these extra sales is building up an extended and profitable clientel.

Sells Other Lines

Someone has said, "the proof of the pudding is in the eating" and the proof of the above assertion was demonstrated to a representive of Canadian Grocer during a recent visit to the store of F. Lawrence, Lambton Mills, Ont. During the half hour that the representative was in the store seven cars stopped at the gasoline pump—located at the front of the store—for gasoline and oil. In every instance the drivers of the cars made a purchase of some other article while paying for the gas. One man purchased a package of cigarettes, another, which happened to be a large truck owned by a cartage firm in Toronto—(Lambton Mills is situated about one and one half miles from Toronto) after filling up with gas, the driver dropped into the store and bought some biscuits, oranges and cigars. Still another, who was a farmer returning from the city after delivering a load of cattle, purchased a bill of goods that amounted to several dollars. And so it went, each and every driver of the seven cars that stopped for gas during the half hour, made a purchase over and above what he apparently intended to make, when stopping for gasoline.

A Chance To Increase Trade

Thus, it is plainly seen that although the profit on a single gallon of gasoline, perhaps is not as large as the merchant would wish, there are possibilities of the yearly turnover of the business being greatly augmented through "the gasoline route."

Stared Sweeping Out Store But Now Has Prosperous Business

Story of progress of R. Thompson in British Columbia, is one of an interesting experience. Now has good store and ice cream parlor.

VANCOUVER (Special).—It shows that a man has the right stuff in him to succeed, when he will leave his home town, where he has eighteen clerks working under him, come out to "the Colonies" and start at the bottom rung—sweeping out.

This was the experience of R. Thompson, and in 1911 he landed in New Westminster and started to sweep out the store for C. A. Welsh. From then on Mr. Thompson accumulated a wealth for experience. He was in Ladysmith when the three year strike of miners commenced. Naturally, while capital and labor had their fight out the tradesmen shop thrived and prospered..

Started With $25

The war added to the many other aggravating circumstances and work with others was not to be had. Finally, with a family of five, a lifetime's experience and twenty-five dollars in cash, Mr. Thompson opened up a store of his own in Ladysmith. The first order was an order from the City Relief Department for groceries for a needy family. However, by careful management, native thrift, and a thorough knowledge of the grocery business the modest little shop thrived and prospered.

In 1918, three days after Mr. Thompson was laid up with an illness (that lasted for several months) a buyer for the business came on the scene, and a fair price was realized. Had a purchaser not appeared at this opportune time, the protacted illness would have resulted in the business gradually falling away, but Mr. Thompson is a firm believer that there is a Divinity that takes an interest in "even a grocer" On his recovery he came to the beautiful north shore of Burrard Inlet, and at Lynn Valley, in the District of North Vancouver, Mr. Thompson acquired a large warehouse used for flour and feed.

Now Has Two Stores

This building now houses several stores and two of them are occupied by Mr. Thompson's two enterprises. One is a well-equipped modern grocery store, and the other an ice cream and confectionery store in which is the Lynn Creek Post Office, Miss Thompson being the Post Mistress.

Today the Lynn Valley Store is well equipped, boasting three computing scales, credit register, meat slicer, cheese cutter, cash register and an adding machine. The district is good and the business grows steadily.

Some day Mr. Thompson may again have eighteen clerks working under him, but this time they will be working for him. And when he tells the junior clerk to sweep out, he is starting him on the tried path of success.

The girl walked briskly into the store and dropped her bag on the counter. "Give me a chicken," she said.

"Do you want a pullet?" the storekeeper asked.

"No," the girl replied. "I wanta carry it."

Does Good Equipment Pay Dividends?

Orderliness and cleanliness will always show proper returns—fixtures that make for economy of merchandise, better display, and the conservation of time represent profitable investment.

(By Henry Johnston, Jr.)

I was in a little town a few months ago and after dark walked around the central square which characterizes small towns. Two bright spots—two only—stood out with inviting attractiveness, and these two were grocery stores. They were brilliantly lighted, though closed for the day. The window glass shone to complete transparency.

In the one, because of the arrangement of the store, there was no window display, but the shelves were in themselves a display that would be hard to better. The goods were so pleasingly arranged and the price tags so prominent, that one might stand in front of the windows and decide on his selections for the next day from what he saw before him.

The other was as orderly and attractive, and its windows were dressed with each item marked plainly and so prominently that its price might be read from the middle of the street. What appealed to me strongly was the fetching display and plain price marks together with the simple orderliness of both places. Involuntarily I thought of grocers everywhere who complain about unfair competition, while being too indifferent, too plainly lazy, to emulate them in these obvious and most effective ways.

Next day I went to inspect the interiors of several grocery stores which had been dark the night before. I found what I had expected to find—disorder, neglect, filth, indifference and laziness. I saw that had any of them lighted his windows the previous night he would thereby have driven more customers to the two clean stores of the town.

Obtuse, Appalling Neglect Everywhere

I was reminded of the lighted windows in a small grocery store in a certain town. In one window, shut in by a solid back, hung a few show-cards, stuck up without plan, or scheme, or design, or order—just hit or miss! On the window floor reposed a china dish with some green onions so far gone that the juice was oozing from them in incipient decay. Beside the onions was a bunch of asparagus plainly in such condition that anyone familiar with that vegetable must rejoice that the window was between it and his nose. Back of that dish was one whereon rested some pears or apples, I forget which, in the first stages of dissolution. The window floor was covered with dirt stained paper.

Here then was an ill-ventilated window—the worst place possible for the freshest vegetables for the short time holding the remnant of the "fresh" display, and heated by a large electric bulb at the expense of the proprietor on a warm October night! A fine wish to which to put the most expensive portion of the store, was it not? Yes, it was NOT!

I found this same condition in the little town I just referred to. Grocers in those stores standing around without a thing on their minds—not even their hats—and nothing in or on their hands but dirt. Without one exception, the windows were neglected. In some were mixed conglomerations of everything in disorder. Others were adorned with wilted celery, wilted oranges, wilted lettuce, mixed with sorrowful walnuts slopping out of a dirty basket, plus fly-blown candy.

In that town, where would you trade? I put it just that way to YOU!

Can you see what I am trying to bring out? It is this:

That the strong points prominent in the two chain units were precisely those on which they enjoyed no monopoly, but which are free to your hand, wherever you are and whatever the size or location of your store.

Fine Equipment Equally Neglected

One store had a really fine layout of fixtures. It was comparatively new and must have cost considerable money. It had very facility for order. But from the indiscriminate pile of bacon in whole strips, half strips and fag ends piled beside and around the dirty slicing machine to the neglected pickle jars which faced the entering customer, that store was a crime!

Any wonder the chains get in their "insiduous work" in such places? It was a marvel if they did not, for such towns cry for moderately decent service. All of them offer a walk-away opportunity for any industrious man to go there and open a grocery store.

Success awaits such men everywhere. Success goes to men who take their business seriously. You find men everywhere—barring such towns, of which unfortunately there are plenty—who begin small, grow rapidly and then instal fixtures that make for economy of merchandise, its better display and the conservation of time. Men who work with their brains as well as their hands—and too many grocers work neither to capacity—are quick to sense the benefits of well chosen equipment.

The points are so many that I can only hint at a few, but I take every one of them from actual experience and observation—not one from an idle dream.

The man who displays his cheese under polished glass, keeping the glass down over the cheese, not up to give the flies preferred chances, sells more cheese. This because it is well displayed and in perfect condition. Being in perfect condition means retention of moisture, hence he gets his weights. By "more cheese" I mean four, five, ten times as much as if it were not so displayed.

Benefit of Self-Contained Counters

How well I remember the old-fashioned counter used in our store before 1900! What a muddle of open boxes, lost paper bags, spilled miscellaneous dried fruit, sugar, tea, coffee—O, everything—it was! We boys had a sort of clean-up bee every so often and brushed it all out. The dirt barrel was renewed on such occasions. It never struck us that said barrel held waste—nothing but preventable waste. If today I could find the value of what we then threw away, I'd be rich. If it could be conserved and its value compounded through the intervening years, I'd be very rich!

Then came a change of outlook—with counters which had no vacancies underneath. All space was occupied with receptacles for the economical, convenient handling of goods, plus preferred storage thereof and the elmination of waste and deterioration. The fronts were attractive display spaces. Our sweepings became so small it was noticeable. This led us to make a study of every shovel of "dirt" to the end that leaks might be traced to the source and those plugged up. There was immense satisfaction and marked increase in net earnings.

It Takes Work

O, it takes work. Sure, it takes plenty of work! I know of no appliance, machine or contrivance that will enable us to sidestep constant work in the grocery store. Also, a well equipped store that is neglected always looks more forlorn than the most primitive one that is disorderly. Plate glass will not clean itself and when dirty it looks worse than ordinary glass. Displays under plate glass must be made with skill and must be renewed periodically—and it all takes work.

But the other side is this: That this work pays in greater proportion to the investment than almost any other the grocer can do. It increases sales—the one thing for which we are in business. Omitting mention of the feeling of pride of workmanship, such as always inspires a wakeful, ambitious man, saying nothing of the pleasure in the ownership of a beautiful store well kept up, we have the hard, sol'd fact that a well kept, well equipped store PAYS, from all angles.

It pays other dividends from the conservation of labor, the saving of false motions. Nobody who has not had practical demonstration can realize the importance of this factor. Looking at the initial investment of $500 to $1000, we shrink from paying it. Yet the cost of $1000 is only $70 or at most $80 a year, and very little conservation of time and labor will return many times six or seven dollars a month.

All factors of advantage in well equipped, clean stores pay dividends; but the most vital return arises from increased sales. This factor alone is more than sufficient to justify scrupulous cleanliness and order, and these are best attained through the medium of the best modern equipment in such measure as the size of your business warrants.

RETAIL MERCHANTS ARE BLAMED

While retail prices have declined considerably during the past year, the public still continues to clammer for lower prices and lays the blame for the alleged high prices to a great extent at the door of the retail merchant. They seem to overlook—either in ignorance or purposely avoiding the facts—the lower basis on which foodstuffs are now sold at over the counter.

It has never been the retailer's idea to boost prices. His principle has always been to mark his merchandise at as low a price as possible, consistent with the service demanded. In many instances this selling price has been below replacement cost. This was particularly true during the period of inflation when values were advancing at an alarming rate. He was quite content to "sell at the old price, until a further stock was required," and generally speaking, it is doubtful whether at any time the public was compelled to pay the highest market price, simply because the merchant had sufficient foresight to keep his purchase a little ahead of the rapidly advancing market.

When wholesale values commenced to recede, no doubt some merchants did not lower their selling price as fast as the primary markets, but it must be remembered that the retailer is at the end of the line and it takes a certain period before the lower price reaches him. The cost of the raw material may be down considerably, but before it reaches the retailer it must pass through many hands, and sometimes it is months before the article manufactured from the lower price material is finally ready for distribution by the retail merchant.

The "dear public" is quite happy making the retail merchant the scapegoat. They do not consider that labor and freight are still at the peak, but are apparently quite satisfied to make the statement that the big spread in prices—from the cost of raw material to the retail price—is a matter of profiteering, the difference going into the pocket of the retail merchant.

Probably one of the reasons for this is the fact that the retail merchant is closer to the consumer than either the producer, manufacturer or wholesaler. It can be plainly seen therefore, that there is needs for a great deal of educational work.

First to show the consumer that in order to get still further lower prices, manufacturing costs, labor, freights, rents and many other incidentals that have shown no reduction what-so-ever must make a proportionate decline. Secondly, the consumer must be convinced that lower prices are now in effect and the purchasing power of the dollar, insofar as foodstuffs is concerned, is practically one-third greater than a year ago.

DISCOURAGE PRICE CUTTING

PRICE cutting is recognized as one of the greatest evils of the grocery business to-day. It not only defeats the purpose of the man who fosters it, but along with the growing 'cash and carry' habit eats away profits on lines which have a staple price. So often a grocer tells himself that he will cut the price on one line and only one line for a day or so, so as to attract trade and believes because he has had a marked increase in sales that his plan has been a success. If he would stop to figure it out, he would see that the neighboring grocer was doing the same thing only perhaps taking a different line. The thrifty buyers are willing to take advantage of his sale and purchase the advertised line and, perhaps one or two other lines, just to cover up their bargain hunting, but just as surely, they go to the other grocery and pick up the bargains there. The thrifty public will eat your apples and leave you only the core. Not only does it defeat the object of building up the business, but it creates distrust. The public begin to believe that the grocer can afford to make these cuts and still leave himself a profit. It is bad business and should be carefully avoided. Yet the mad whirl has been given a great start and it takes a man of daring to stand in its way. The grocers are loud in denouncing the practice yet few make any real efforts to stop it or establish a new precedent of a fair and steady price being unafraid to tell the public that only a reasonable profiit to carry on the service is asked that this margin must be maintained.

EDITODIALS IN BRIEF

A good merchant owes his customers good advertising as much as he owes them sixteen ounces to the pound.

The two essential measures required right now to meet the present conditions of business are genuine salesmanship, to get all the business available and strict economy in operation, which includes the stopping of all leakage and waste.

MAY NOT ALLOW EXPORT OF IMMATURE FRUIT

Kingston, Jamaica, June 12.—After a discussion by the Legislative Council it was decided by the Government to introduce a bill to prevent the shipment of immature bananas and citrus fruit to the United States. Very heavy penalties would be imposed for violations.

Let the Manufactures Fix Resale Prices

Retail Merchants' Association of Vancouver promise the utmost co-operation with manufacturers in an effort to have the manufacturers stipulate the retail price and to have them refuse to sell to any retailers who sells below that specified price.

Vancouver (Special)—There is a new concrete effort here towards getting the organized and unorganized grocers to advocate the right to establish the principle of "price setting by the manufacturer." The various British Columbia manufacturers behind the "Made in B. C." movement approached the Retail Merchants' Association to ask for its support of the campaign which has been under way since the first of the year.

The "Retail Merchants' Association" said "yes ; IF!" The Association would do its utmost to ensure the heartiest support on the part of the merchants it the manufacturers would undertake to recognize the principle that the manufacturer stipulate the retail price of his product and refuse to sell to any retailer who sells below the stipulated price.

What Retailers Endorse

Here is the wording of the document which is being presented to each white retailer in British Columbia for endorsation and signature:

"We, the undersigned retail grocers of the Province of British Columbia, hereby go on record as being in favor of the principle of price protection by the manufacturers of foodstuffs, by which we mean that we recognize the right of the manufacturer to stipulate the retail price of his product and to refuse to sell to any retailer who sells below the stipulated price. We further agree to lend our unqualified support to any manufacturer or group of manufacturers who will put this principle into practice."

By the 8th of June it is expected that the entire City of Vancouver will have been covered with this document. The signatures obtained so far are such as to make the movement a very seriously attended one. On June 4 the Westminster Branch of the Grocers' section R. M. A. gave the subject its attention, and early the following week a special session of the Victoria branch will discuss the movement, Mr. Hougham, Provincial Secretary, and J. T. Crowder, Vancouver branch president presenting the facts.

The Manufacturer Has Right

J. T. Crowder and James Harkness, president of the Grocers' section, Vancouver, state that to date, in Canada, the right for any manufacturer to set a fair retail price, and maintain it, has not been denied. Among the parallel cases mentioned by Mr. Crowder to Canadian Grocer in support of such a principle was that of the manufacturers of Gillette safety razors have successfully maintained a universal price for their product.

Let Manufacturers Compete

"The retailers," added Mr. Crowder, "maintain that all price competition should be done by the manufacturer and packer. If he sets his retail resale price it is up to him to set it as low as possible, and to give the best quality he can for the price.

"The retailers should compete with each other on service, courtesy, ability, knowledge, personality. There is no good end served from the public's the manufacturers' or the retailers' standpoints by the inefficient, untrained retailer attempting to offset his incompetency by selling for less than his cost, and eventually figuring in the bankruptcy court."

Doing Business Costs

"From an investigation made by one large business paper pubisher it was found that the average cost of doing business in 1,530 retail businesses was 24.65 per cent. of their turnover. The figures for last year in one of the largest drug stores in Vancouver [illegible] roved that the cost of doing busi[illegible] in that store for 1920 was a mere $10 short of the even 25 per cent. That is a[illegible]s close as you could ever find the [illegible] l percentage.

"The grocery busine[illegible] is only sli[illegible] less expensive to conduct. Recently an example of the need of directions [illegible]e part of the manufacturer came to my attention. There is a brand of g[illegible]ice that costs $4.50 per dozen to a [illegible]ailer in any quantity. The resale p[illegible]e in all stores with a costing system [illegible]—$6 for the dozen. The gross mar[illegible] here is 25 per cent. on selling price. The grocer whose cost of doing business is as low as 2[illegible] per cent. has a profit of 5 per cent. One retailer is selling this grape juice at 35c—$4.20 per dozen. On each dozen the merchant loses 30c of his cost, and in addition has been out of pocket 84c that it cost him to make those sales. Does the public expect he has any right to expect to receive service for nothing? That one merchant besides heading for bankruptcy himself is inferring to the public that all the other merchants are gouging an extra 15c on each bottle of grape juice—which 15c they do not need and should not take.

Best Interests Served

"The best interests of the public and the whole system of distribution would be best served," states the president of the Vancouver Board, Retail Merchants of Canada, "were the manufacturers and packers to set a fair price on their products, the lowest price they can set, commensurate with their quality, one that will give the distributor only a just return for the service he actually does, and then bend every effort to see that that price is charged—no more, no less. To such manufacturers we can promise the whole hearted support of the organized, thinking, trained body of retailers known as the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada. The sales force of the manufacturer and jobber—the ones who serve between the manufacturer of foodstuffs and the consuming public.

The Cash and Carry Store

"One objection already pointed out is that there is no provision made for the cash and carry store. No difference made between those who deliver and charge and those who demand cash and give no delivery. To this objection it might be said that many merchants, in various parts of the country, make a small allowance on total bills to customers who pay cash at the time they purchase, and do not ask for delivery. C. Pike was one of these and his system was described in the Canadian Grocer of May 27th."

TRAVELLERS ATTENDING CONVENTION [illegible]ARY MAKE MERRY

Calg[illegible]14.—Hundreds of delegat[illegible]d Commercial Travellers' convention held here recently met in Bowness Park for entertainment and as a result both the swimming pools and dance pavilions were crowded, while canoes and rowboats were also at a premium. The knights of the grip, leaving the cares and worries of their business sessions behind them, plunged into the fun with the vim and abandon of children, and it is safe to say that the park held no happier crowd in the past two years than the travelers on this occasion. Also the delegates were taken for a trip to the P. Burns packing plant, and later for a trip to the P. Burns ranch at Bow Valley, where they were royally entertained by the cattle king's representatives.

They were officially welcomed to the city by His Worship Mayor Adams. His worship urged the travelers to take a greater interest in civic matters, and intimated that they would hear more along this line from their councillors later in the year.

The address of welcome was replied to by Past Supreme Councillor Bro. J. C. Fox, of the Winnipeg council, 154. For the mayor's information, Mr. Fox said that all delegates attending the convention were representative of the whole Dominion, with the exception of British Columbia, that council being attached to the United States order.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MONTREAL, June 15.—There is very little change in the grocery market. Prices are steady with a fair trade in all lines. Molasses is reduced in price by local wholesalers and the weak condition of sugar continues with wholesalers still cutting the price below the refiners quotations. The rice market shows more strength and improved market both in price and n buying resulting from a stronger primary market and a keen demand from Europe. There is little change in the tea market despite the strength of the primary markets. Early vegetables are lower. The most noticeable decline being in cucumbers. Cabbages are higher in price but now tomatoes are lower. There is no change in package goods or in bulk cereals. The nut market is strong, particularly on walnuts, peanuts and almonds. Oranges and lemons are higher in price and lemons are scarce. Apples and strawberries are a little lower. Salmon and some brands of peaches are lower in price. Local wholesalers have made a general reduction in the price of all brands of salmon despite the fact that there are no reports on the new pack of salmon.

Currant Market Stronger

DRIED FRUITS.—There is practically no change to quote this week. Raisins are still scarce with a very strong market and as a result currants are in more demand with stronger tendencies. Apricots and evaporated apples are very firm in price and quotations which have been made below present market prices are disappearing. A firmer market in these lines may be looked for in the future.

Tea Prices Unchanged

Montreal.

TEAS.—The tea market shows little improvement despite the fact that primary markets are stronger. The stringency in buying and the stocks of cheaper grade teas on hand are responsible for the lack of response on the part of this market to the improved conditions on primary markets. The quotations on teas remain unchanged.

Maple Sugar Lower

MAPLE SUGAR.—Some lower prices have been quoted on maple syrup and maple sugar owing to the surplus stock on hand in Canada this year. The demand for export has not been as large this year as formerly and a domestic market must be sought by these products. Forty pound boxes of maple sugar are reduced to $3.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 15.— The sugar market is in an unsettled condition in view of the weakness in the raw market. Canned tomatoes and peas are showing signs of scarcity and prices are firmly maintained. Some brands of jams are still offered at a lower price than the manufacturer's list. Teas and coffees continue to hold a strong position with higher prices in primary markets. Walnuts and almonds are firm and stocks of walnuts are fairly well cleaned up in France. Brazils are showing more activity and show signs of firmness. Bulk cereals are quiet and fairly steady. Cornflakes are quoted at a lower price. One brand of condensed milk has declined. One brand of soluble coffee is higher while cotton twine is reduced. Prunes, apricots and evaporated apples are holding a firm position at the recent advances in primary markets. Southern rices are firmer with some wholesalers quoting a higher price on Blue Rose. Strawberries are commencing to arrive in fair quantities and the crop looks promising. New potatoes are lower while asparagus is about finished.

Canned Soup Advanced

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—Supplies of canned tomatoes and peas are showing signs of scarcity and it is likely that these lines will be pretty well cleaned up by the time the new pack is ready for the market. Canned vegetables are maintaining a steadier basis, but fruits show no indication of stabilization, quotations continuing irregular. Jams are still offered at 72 cents. Campbells soups are advanced to $1.65 per dozen.

The old factory was outgrown. The new factory, which is shown above, consists of a thoroughly modern building containing 40.000 square feet of manufacturing space and 55 acres of land.

This will provide for present needs and ample facilities for expansion of Canadian business, and also for additional export for made-in-Canada TOLEDO SCALES to other portions of the British Empire.

Why Toledo Scales Give Honest Weight

Weighing is simply measuring the force of gravity. There is only one never varying measure of gravity, and that is gravity itself. Springs vary but the pull of gravity is constant and unchanging.

It is this constant never changing pull of gravity which operates the pendulum in Toledo Scales; and the pendulum automatically counterbalanecs the load on the platter, thereby measuring the weight of the load by gravity itself.

It is the pendulum that makes Toledo Scales automatic without springs and therein lies their great practical advantage.

It is the pendulum that makes possible that confident, inspiring, trade-bringing slogan, "TOLEDO"—"NO SPRINGS" —"HONEST WEIGHT".

Dried Fruits Firm

DRIED FRUITS. — Apricots continue in a strong position with limited supplies under an active movement for European export. Another lot of apricots held in bond by a Toronto importer were resold to an American buyer at an advance of six cents per pound. Prunes are steady to firm under the recent advances at the coast, but wholesale prices on spot are unchanged at the lower level. Evaporated apples are active in a firmer and higher market. Halowee dates are becoming cleared up. Sair dates are offered at 6¾ cents per pound.

Toronto.

Coffee Market Steady

Winnipeg.

COFFEE.—The primary coffee market is showing a firmer tone and it is expected that coffee prices will advance. The old crop is practically exhausted and the new crop is now being delivered. A reliable estimate of the coming Brazilian crop indicates that there will be a maximum outurn of 7 million bags in the state of Sao Paulo and a maximum of 3 million bags in the states of Rio Janiero and Espirito Santo combined. It is felt that the coffee markets of the world are now under the control of Brazil. Locally the demand is steady and merchants are buying in small quantities.

Canned Vegetables Firm

CANNED GOODS.—The market for canned vegetables is showing a steadier tone, more especially on tomatoes, peas and corn, due to the fact that independent stocks are practically cleaned up. Coast salmon packers have agreed to pay a certain price for sockeye salmon, which is considered a much lower figure than has been offered for years. An improvement is shown in the demand for salmon and sardines. Canned fruits are generally quiet with a better movement being noted for pineapple. Prices on all canned goods continue unchanged.

PRODUCE AND PROVISIONS

Sells as Much as 80 Pounds of Bacon in a Day

Henry and Glackin, St. Catharines, Ont., believe the most imporant fixture in the grocery store is the refrigerator—have two refrigerators with one fitted with special compartments for display.

"ONE of the most important fixtures in a retail store is the refrigerator," stated Mr. Henry of Henry & Glackin, St. Catharines, Ont. to a representative of Canadian Grocer. "By refrigerator I do not mean a box or a fancy case that will only keep the goods cool, but a refrigerator must be so constructed to keep the goods at an even and dry temperature. If goods are put in the box soft, the temperature must be low enough to harden it up in a short time !"

Firm Has Two Refrigerators

The Henry & Glacklin store is equipped with two refrigerators, an extra large one that occupies nearly the entire rear of the store for meats and another of medium size used for storing butter. The large refrigerator has practically two compartments, the front or the side facing the store has sliding glass doors with shelves behind making it convenient for display purposes. The rear compartment is large enough to allow the entrance of a salesman and it is in this section that the surplus stock of meat is kept.

"I have been twenty-three years in the business and my experience has taught me that nearly as much meat is spoiled through dampness as there is by not having ice at all", continued Mr. Henry "with the ——— refrigerator, the air is perfectly dry, so dry in fact, that you can strike a match anywhere inside, even on the bottom of the ice tray. Another point about this refrigerator is that the consumption of ice is very small. Of course it takes a lot to fill it when it is dry but once it is filled, it only requires a small quantity each day."

Sells 80 pounds of Bacon in One Day

Henry & Glacklin has quite an extensive trade for sliced bacon. Sales on Saturday average 80 pounds and on other days about 40 pounds, and is steadily increasing. This increase is largely attributed to the installation of a meat slicer which permits the bacon being sliced to the desired thickness required by the customer, and at the same time eliminating all waste. The method adopted by the store is to slice the bacon, preparatory for the day's business. The bacon after sliced is wrapped in wax paper, in one pound and half pound parcels, then stored in the refrigerator until wanted.

In slicing the bacon, the whole side is placed on the machine and slicing is commenced at the end. The outside pieces are mixed in with the ther slices and weighed up, but care is taken to see that not more than one outside slice is placed in one parcel. Thus it is seen that the whole side of bacon is sold at full price, and no waste ends are left over to sell at a lower price or as sometimes occurs, find the way to the garbage.

A Glass Enclosed Cheese Cutter on Counter Increases the Sales of Cheese in their Store

Hugh Stevens, Collingwood, Ont., believes that this display case and cutter has meant a larger turnover in cheese than before its installation—suggests cheese to customer—always cuts accurately.

glass enclosed meat cutter is practically essential if a grocer is going sell much cheese, according to the inion of Hugh Stephens of Collingod, Ont. Mr. Stephens has a very fine eese cutter and the same is enclosed a large glass case. It stands on the unter up near the front of the store d this location. Mr. Stephens declares, means a good deal in the way of increasing sales. It is bound to suggest cheese to the customer at the counter. The case permits of it being shown always in a clean, attractive way.

Increases Sales

Mr. Stephens states that his sales of cheese have shown a very marked increase since the installation of the case and cutter. He says where it is situated, people cannot fail to see it, and the suggestion of a pound of cheese is bound to spring in one's mind. He believes that it has been easily paid for, in the number of increased sales. Apart from the fact that the cheese is always in perfect condition, he states that the cutter cuts the cheese accurately, a pound, two pounds or half a pound as required.

Pays For Iself in a Year

W. A. Jones, Tilsonburg, Ont., is another grocer who is enthusiastic over the value of a cheese cutter in the grocery business. He told a representative of Canadian Grocer that his cheese cutter paid for itself in one year. He remarked that it always cuts the cheese accurately the weight asked for, and it is, in his opinion, a valuable piece of equipment for a grocer.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, June 15.—The affect of the weakness of sterling exchange has a marked influence on the produce market. The demand for butter for expert has fallen off and a weakness in that market resulted with a drop of one cent a pound. The same influence has been felt in the cheese market with a like result. Eggs on the other hand have strengthened with an improved enquiry despite the adverse sterling exchange. The production of eggs is not as large and the local consumption shows an ncrease. Perhaps the most striking feature of the market is the advance in the price of lard with a very strong market. Buying in this market has been suddenly stimulated with the affect that the large stocks that were on hand have been cut down until a much better movement from producer to consumer has resulted. Hog prices, locally stand firm with a good steady market for both fresh meats and smoked meats.

Butter Prices Lower

Montreal.

BUTTER.—During the past week there has been a marked increase in the receipts of butter and a falling off in the demand for export which has resulted in larger stocks accumulating and a weaker market. Butter prices are tending towards a lower level after the strength of the past two weeks. The depression in the export market is due to the adverse condition of sterling exchange. Local butter prices show a decline of one cent per pound.

Stronger Market For Eggs

Montreal.

EGGS.—The feature of the egg market is the increased demand from English importers for fresh Canadian eggs. This, coupled with lighter receipts of eggs on the local market has considerably strengthened prices and a much stronger market is in evidence. The demand for local consumption is large and prices are one cent higher than a week ago.

Gaspe Salmon Reduced

FRESH FISH.—The fish market is quiet this week with better supplies and lower prices. Gaspe salmon is in better supply, quoted at 25 cents. Halibut is reduced to 19 cents and lake fish shows an improvement with a reduction of one cent a pound selling at 19 cents. The demand for fish is not as brisk as it has been.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 15.—Under keen competitive buying and light receipts, the hog market moved up. There is no indication, however, that this condition will last for any length of time as packers are endeavoring to bring prices back to the lower level. Whether this can be done will depend altogether upon the number offered as there appears to be a good demand at the present time. Dressed meats are unchanged cooked hams are holding firm under light supplies and an active demand. Smoked hams are slightly higher but bacon, dry salt meats and barrel meats are lower. Lard and shortening continue easy but quotations are unchanged. Butter and cheese have easier tendencies with quotations on the former unchanged but the latter showing reductions. Eggs are firmly held under light receipts. Shipments of fresh lake fish are rather irregular with quotations unchanged but chicken halibut is quoted lower.

Butter Slightly Easier

Toronto.

BUTTER.—The butter market has developed a slightly easier tone with a tendency for a downward movement. Production is increasing very fast and as export is not very heavy, the outlook at present has an easy aspect.

Cooked Hams Look Firm

Toronto.

COOKED MEATS.—There is a firm undertone to cooked hams, attributed for the most part to the recent srengthening of the hog market and the fact that supplies are none too large under an active demand which is steadily increasing as the season advances. Headcheese and bologna are down slightly while pork tongues are quoted at 37 cents in advance of one cent.

Cheese Prices Lower

Toronto.

CHEESE.—Quotations are down one cent per pound bringing the price to 17½ cents. The strength that has been manifest in the cheese market for the last two or three weeks is decidedly lacking, no doubt brought about by the shutting off of export business. In some quarters the opinion is expressed that the strength and higher prices was purely artificial and that prices were advanced by the competition in bidding for supples for export. Now that export business to a certain extent is lacking, the market has sagged to lower levels and there are strong indications that prices will go even lower. There is still a small quantity of old cheese available, but it is holding firm at 34 to 35 cents per pound.

Live Hogs Higher

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS.—Live hog prices were higher during the week under extremely light receipts. Values have been steadily declining for some time past, but on account of the light offerings and keen competition buyers were unable to put into effect a further cut which they had set out to do. The result of the small offerings was an advance of 50 cents per hundred over last week's prices. The cattle trade has also a steadier tone. Dressed meats are unchanged.

Lard Market Easy

Toronto.

LARD.—The lard market still has an easy feeling with prices unchanged this week on the tierce basis of 11¾ cents per pound. Manufacturers are apparently overloaded with lard and there seems to be no outlet except for domestic business and that is mostly on the hand to mouth basis. Formerly there was a good export demand, but this is now almost entirely lacking, which accounts for the depressed condition of this market.

AT THE SIGN OF THE ROSE

As the merchant of the days regarded his sign as the symbol of character, so do we regard our "sign," the Rose Brand, placed upon the very highest quality products this organization prepares. The Rose Brand gives the customer a means of identifying goods she can rely on—it does away with indiscriminate "hit-or-miss" buying—and it protects you against the dissatisfaction of your customers. Let the people who come in your store know the kind of goods you sell by keeping Rose Brand products well displayed.

BRAZIL NUTS
Likely to be Higher

This years crop of Brazil nuts has been exceptionally good and the quality is also good. It is estimated that the crop will run about 20,000 tons, 60 per cent of which goes to North America and the balance to Europe. A recent despatch from primary markets says "Stocks are nearly exhausted: competitors so far have been sharp enough in not allowing any parcel to escape them: last sales were made at the equivalent of nine cents duty paid. New York markets show a rising tendency. It therefore looks as if the large washed Manaos Brazil nuts were practically exhausted at Manaos and those who have been waiting expecting bargains may probably find that they have overstayed their market to secure the guaranteed large washed Manaos.

★Bigger Tea Sales Reward Energy

Are you one of those merchants, who, when times are a little slow, rolls up his sleeves, so to speak, and goes out after business? Then you're a man after our own hearts, because we believe that "elbow grease," properly applied, has much to do with better times. Maybe your tea sales have fallen off, then a little salesmanship will bring early results.. People have not stopped buying, else our sales would not show an increase each month. And, what is better, they have turned back from pursuing tea that had only its chapness to commend it and are drinking good tea, RED ROSE TEA, which they used in such quantities before the war.

When your clerk has a minute have him dress a window of RED ROSE TEA. The package lends itself well to this kind of display and you will couple up nicely with our outdoor advertising campaign, now well under way. Some packages neatly arranged on your showcase will help a lot, too.

These suggestions are well worth trying out, for the more sales energy we put into our business the sooner we'll reach the better times we all want.

Another Decline Is Reported In Sugar

A further recession of 50 cents per hundred is reported, making a total decline in a week of $1.25, the present price now being $9.24 Montreal basis—raw market is quiet.

Since this article was written another decline on refined sugar of 50 cents per hundred was announced, making the price $8.75, Montreal basis. The raw sugar market continues in a weak position with little business passing.

A further decline in sugar prices of 50 cents per hundred was announced on Saturday last. This makes a total decline for the week of $1.25 and brings the price to $9.25 Montreal basis. During the same period declines were also registered in the New York market on American refined, the last of which made the price 5.60 cents.

For some time past little business has transpired direct from refiners with the result that production at the refineries is practically at a standstill, but with reduction of stocks of refined and with elimination of second hand parcels, it is believed that some plants will resume operations. And especially now that raw sugars are procurable at prices that will make it safe to operate.

Raws Quiet and Unsettled

The raw sugar market is quiet and unsettled with little business passing insofar as Cubans are concerned, but we hear of sales of Porto Ricos, Phillipines and San Domingos all at 4 cents duty paid. Rainy weather still continues in Cuba and 14 additional factories closed last week leavng only 43 in operation which means 165 central factories having closed up this seasn.

Selling Below Production Cost

Cuban sugars are selling below the cost of production and the financial conditions are so badly demoralized as to appear almost hopeless, but probably some arrangements will be made in the course of the next few months or else we may see a very severe shrinkage in next year's crop. The President of an American sugar company expresses his view of the Cuba conditions as follows. Selling price of Cubans is now below the cost of production. We paid the colonos or cane farmers for their cane on the basis of $.0348 sugar prices recently. After we had manufactured the sugar from the cane we found the market such that there is difficulty in selling it even at a ruinous loss. Sugar at $.0300 is a drug on the market.

Cuban Crop 3,500,000 Tons

"Such conditions cannot continue. Ths year the Cuban crop will run to 3,500,000 tons or more, but next year unless prices rise there will be a drastic curtailment. You cannot run a business long at a loss. Were the Cuban crop withdrawn from the ruling price here would be closer to 30 cents than 3 cents.

"Cuba is not selling much sugar now, for there is practically no market. Many buyers are holding off, hoping for even lower prices, while others are using up sugar delivered on contracts entered into before the Cuban Sugar Commission existed. But sugar prices cannot go much lower. The grinding season is practically over and the sugar stocks are stored.

Waiting For Improvements

Banks and the sugar companies are keeping their sugar holdings, waiting for the improvements in conditions. Most of the "distress sugars" have been sold, the stocks of those who must liquidate immediately. Other owners will not sell at the present losses unless absolutely forced to."

The Case of the Retailer Is Put Forth

The retailer has been made the scapegoat of a strong undercurrent of resentment for his alleged refusal to reduce prices, but the retailer suffered most in the price advances.

By John O'Connor, manager Murray-Kay Co., Toronto.

IT requires some courage and a large degree of self-restraint to avoid blaming the other fellow for conditions that strike at one's business activities.

There's a glory that comes of self-analysis honestly applied, but most of us prefer to coddle the personal ego and set up the other fellow as the one to be condemned—all of which is leading up to the situation so apparent at the present time wherein the retailer is being made the scapegoat of a strong undercurrent of resentment for his alleged refusal to reduce prices.

Whether those who are all too frequently endeavoring to place—among other things—responsibility for the unemployment evil on the shoulders of the retailer have any serious or real grounds for their line of propoganda is difficult to determine, for it must be admitted that no specific instances of retail profiteering have been brought into prominence; but the propoganda, nevertheless, bears the stamp of authenticity because of its endorsement by men in high positions. When linked with the idea that, because of high retail prices, commodities are not moving and manufacturing plants are silent, the propoganda takes a slant that will work serious harm if not checked.

The Chief Price-raisers

The public undoubtedly has suffered through the so-called "vicious" circle of expanding prices which eventually got out of control, but—let's see who were contributory to the inflation? Is it not fair to assume that those two highly organized entities, if I may call them such, Labor on the one hand, Capital on the other, were the two great factors in the production costs.

Throughout the period of price spiral activity the retail trade was the one that suffered from interference to an extent that gave many a retailer an almost hopeless outlook.

First, we had the Board of Commerce insisting on a margin of profit entirely inadequate to the proper financing of the average business. Next, we had the luxury tax with the arbitrary enrollment of all retailers as tax collectors without fee or reward. These two Governmental handicaps on retail distribution had they continued long enough, would have sent many a sound business to the scrap-heap.

After having successfully combated the handicaps referred to above, the retailer now finds himself charged with arbitrarily holding up prices—a charge impossible of proof and wholly ridiculous, for there is no other line of mercantile activity that stands so aloof from organized action as does the retail trade.

Every other department of business effort has its trade organization—ostensibly for the purpose of preventing demoralization—but in the last analysis one is led to the conclusion that the stick-together spirit prevents many a break in prices that might occur if things were different.

The retailer plays a lone hand so far as the pricing of his commodities is concerned. His ambition is to attain prominence as a merchant giving the best value obtainable anywhere. Occasionally he breaks into hectic merchandising by slashing prices below replacement costs. In such cases he is merely hysterical and is not contributing to the welfare of his community when he does the reckless things, even though a few seem to benefit temporarily by getting goods for less than their worth.

I am interpolating this sidelight on retailing in proof of my contention that no combination exists for the holding up of prices in the retail trade.

In no other line of business is there to be found the fierce competition that governs retail activities. This competition is an absolute guard against exorbitant profits by the retailer, and so long as retailers are determined to conduct their business free of secret agreements or understanding with respect to prices the public can rest secure in the knowledge that it will never have to pay more than a fair margin of the retailer's margin.

The whole system of retailing is modelled on the plan of not how much, but how little can we quote. Indeed individual retailers from time to time have used their great abilities and have spent money freely to secure legal judgment enabling them to sell below fixed prices. This is a matter of record in many courts.

Not How High, But How Low

The public's ability to pay has never entered in a large way into the retailer's curriculum; rather has he devoted himself to the pulling down of costs, thereby giving the ultimate consumer the benefit of highly trained merchandising ability. It s a matter of everyday occurrence that retailers are in conference with manufacturers closely analyzing comodities and endeavoring, through the placing of large orders, to cut production costs. This all works in favor of the consumer, for the retailer passes on whatever benefit he is able to secure from reduced production costs.

The retailer is the last link in the chain—producer to consumer. The price the retailer pays must absorb all the costs and profits which Labor and Capital thing they are entitled to. If these have been more than is necessary, it is the combination of Labor and Capital that should answer at the bar of public opinion.

The retailer can place his margin of profit only at a point in line with what his competitor is willing to accept. Let me emphasize again the retailer's position—at the end of the line. In order to get goods to sell he must pay the price, or rather assume the burden created by those who brought the commodities to the finished state; and may I conclude with this statement:

The spiral of retail prices never climbed to the heights—proportionally, I mean—of manufacturing costs. Today prices at retail are fixed below the level of what should be secured in order to show a fair return to the retailer. I think most retail organiztaions can bear me out in this.

System of Cash Discounts Was Not Satisfacory

S. A. Todd, general merchant, Perdue, Sask., stated to Canadian Grocer he had given three years' trial to a system of cash discounts for a failure in his case. His plan had been to give the cash slips.

He said that some women would collect cash slips from all her friends and bring them in. Others would say that they would drop in Saturday, and be most surprised that they couldn't get a cash slip for such splendid pay while still others maintained that 30 days was cash. and be offended at the merchants different interpretation of the word "cash", Mr. Todd stated that probably the discount at the time of sale would have been more workably but that there had been no increase in busines to justify the $1500 that he had paid out in the last year so he had discontinued the policy. He would be interested to read of others who have had different experiences.

BOARD REFUSES TO LOWER EXPRESS RATES ON ICE-CREAM

Ottawa, June 22.—In a judgment just issued the board of railway commissioners refuses the application of the manufacturers of ice cream that this commodity should be placed in the second class for express purposes and not in the first class as at present. In rendering his judgment, Chief Commissioner Carvell declares that ice cream is essentially a luxury.

'Price Cutting a Parasite Eating Away Earnings'

A message from Armand Chaput, the new president of the Canadian wholesale grocers' association—"the time to settle down to better and saner business methods, with a more comprehensive understanding of conditions that surround us."

We must not allow ourselves to forget the solemn resolutions, we as holesalers made to ourselves and to our siness associates, resolving to stand gether, fighting rash and radical meth- ls that have almost threatened the very istence of our organizations and would ve, if unchecked, eaten away the very undations upon which our business is ilt," said Armand Chaput, the new resident of the Canadian Wholesale rocers' Association, and managing di- ctor of L. Chaput, Fils & Cie, Ltd., holesale grocers of Montreal, when eaking to a Canadian Grocer repre- ntative of the work of the Association r the coming year.

Peril of Price Cutting

"We must cease our petty strifes, ase throwing mud in each other's faces d settle down to better and saner busi- ss methods with a more comprehensive derstanding of the conditions that sur- und us and the problems that face us, me of which are common to all of us d others peculiar to the provinces and stricts in which we do business, but of which are common perils to the ocery business and therefore must be ndled by a common interest. In unity ere is strength. The strongest of us nnot continually withstand the wear d tear of internal strife. The peril of ice cutting which has grown to alarm- proportions, is one example of the rasite that eats away little by little vitality of the legitimate wholesale cery business. None of us can afford invest money in stock, carry the ck and the risk and distribute the ods for nothing, yet that is the actual ult of the price cutting programme.

Plenty of Business For All

There is plenty of business for all of more than we can handle if it is perly developed, but the haphazard thod of seeking business by cutting ces even below cost not only robs the ler of legitimate profits, but gener- s a feeling of mistrust and unsteadi- s among the retail trade. It spreads wild fire, knocks the bottom out of rkets, causes restraint on the part the buyers and strikes home at the perator of the scheme with a pace cut prices that will run him and oth- off their feet before it can be brought a stand still.

Suicidal Prices

My plea to the wholesale grocers and he retailers, too, is to stop and think he lessons they have or should have rned during the past two years. One commodity after another has had to be sold at or below cost. Much money has been lost, prices had to come down, the quicker the better, but the frenzy should stop at the dictates of genuine market conditions and not run on in a mad race to prices suicidal to business. We should bear in mind particularly three things this year. First, that we should stand together and keep each other informed of business conditions and problems as we find them. Secondly, we should avoid all practices that will not tend to restore the confidence of the buyers, and thirdly, that although we represent a number of different firms, we all belong to one big organization which offers the most efficient and cheapest form of distribution of grocery products to the retail trade and hence a big service to the public of Canada.

Most Economical System

The retailer and manufacturer would do well to bear in mind that the wholesale grocery as a public institution owes its very existence to the fact that it is the most economical system of service and distribution to the retailer and therefor to the public. It is an indispensable factor in merchandising as it is quite evident to all who stop to think. The wholesalers, too, must reallze this and stand together in their purpose to give the best service possible to the retailer. The first step in this direction, in my estimation, is the stabilization of the market and the development of confidence in market conditions and in each other. This can best be obtained by fair and square dealing one with the other and an understanding of the conditions that face each other. It is my most sincere hope that through this coming year these enviable conditions may be brought about and we ask the co-operation of the retailer as well as every wholesaler that w may attain this efficiency and solidity."

A LONG JOB

A greengrocer's boy hailed a boat in dock at Liverpool, and the surly mate gruffly asked him what he wanted.

"I've got some vegetables for the ship," was the reply.

"All right, you needn't come aboard: throw 'em up one at a time," said the mate, as he stood in readiness to receive the expected vegetables.

"Ahoy, there; look out!" shouted the lad, as he threw a single green pea towards the mate; "I've got a sack of them!"—Spare Moments.

Presentation Is Made To Mr. Blain On 77th Birthdav

During the opening day's session, of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Convention, which was held at Quebec recently, the association took occasion to formally congratulate the president on the attainment of his seventy-seventh birthday, which happened to be the first day of the convention. The congratulations of the association took a more concrete form, when Mr. Blain was presented with a handsome oil portrait of himself by E. Wyly Greer, of Toronto.

STORKS HOVER OVER WESTERN GROCERS LTD., IN VANCOUVER

Vancouver, June 14.—A large flock of storks has been observed hovering over the corner of Water and Abbott Streets, Vancouver. The Western Grocers Ltd., seem to have had particular attention as Eric Smith came down to work May 31st with a broad smile and the news that a fine baby boy had arrived that morning. The fine spirit of friendly rivalry that exists in that staff is best shown, probably by the fact that H. J. McMillan, correspondence manager, came down the next day and faded Eric with the announcement that twin boys had been his gift from the storks. Salesmanager Crawford and others of the staff are practically crippled this week from sitting with their fingers crossed.

Window Display Convinces the Public

The Hudson Bay Co., Vancouver, B. C., recently put in a window illustrating the decline in prices and showing the purchasing power of the dollar as compared with a year ago.

VANCOUVER, June 20.— There is much written in the newspapers every day to the effect that prices on many lines are coming down. Even comparative figures and graphs, charts and examples, but it has remained ofr the window dresser to dramatize the truths in such a way as to make it impossible for the public to miss it.

Probably the first in the West to adopt this method was the Hudsons Bay Store in Vancouver. The company dressed a window in this way. On one hand stands a sack of white sugar, to which is pinned a card which reads "One hundred pound sack of granulated sugar cost in 1920 — $23.00."

On the other side stands a like sack of sugar bearing a card which reads, "One hundred pounds of granulated sugar and all these groceries can be bought now for $23.00" and surrounding this last sack is a most astonishing volume of groceries. Tea coffee, oatmeal, package cereals, rice, cocoanut, spices and a host of articles of every-day use.

Between these two displays stands a large hand-lettered card with ribbons to either display which further contrasts the purchasing power of $23 in 1920 and at present.

When it is remembered that sugar was selling in Vancouver for $23 last year and to-day is quoted at $10.75 it is apparent that quite a considerable order of groceries can be purchased today for the difference. Mr. Richdale, manager of the grocery department said he was astonished at the differences in price. He noted the declines every day but when he went to work to prepare a list for this purpose, it quite exceeded what he would have expected, "and if I have found this practical comparison enlightening, I am sure that the consumer will have even a greater surprise," he said.

On the grocery floors the display is duplicated, and quite a bit of counter space is taken to display all the packages with cards on each, showing quantities and present prices.

"We have made it a regular feature of the store," said Mr. Bell, the assistant manager, "to encourage and assist demonstrations. For this purpose we have reserved several "circles," on the grocery floor, part of wihch we will place at the disposal of any of the manufacturers who are ready to supply experienced demonstrators. The manufacturers appreciate the opportunity and we have splendid results from cooperating with them in this way. It would be possible for any retailer to reserve a small space, well located, in which any manufacturer so disposed could stage a demonstration.

EMPLOYERS OF WESTERN CANADA FLOUR MILLS ENJOY THEIR PICNIC

Toronto, June 13.—The Western Canada Flour Mills Company held its annual picnic on Saturday last. Special cars conveyed the picnickers comprising the office and warehouse staff and their families to Bond Lake where sporting events, to say nothing of the good things to eat were thoroughly enjoyed.

One of the features of the day was the basball game between the warehouse and office staffs, the latter being the losers, but they are saying nothing about it. They are content with taking all the honors and redeeming themselves by winning the tug of war, principally however through the solid anchorage of General-Manager McFarlane.

The ladies' events were entered into with much enthusiasm, the honors going to Miss Coles, who was the chief sprinter of the day.

The committee comprised Gordon Doddington, J. Couse, W. P. Sparr, E. L. Collins, also Misses McCaully, Col. Murngy and Weir.

Toronto Grocers Make Merry at Annual Picnic

Thirty-fourth annual outing of the Toronto Retail Grocers' section of the R.M.A. was held in Cobourg on Wednesday of last week. Ideal weather conditions and a fine programme combined to make the day one of pleasure for all.

(By staff correspondent Canadian Grocer.)

Toronto, June 16.—The thirty-fourth annual picnic and excursion of the Toronto Retail Grocers' section of the R.M.A. came to a successful climax when the steamer Corona pulled into her moorings at the Yonge St. wharf at eleven o'clock on Wednesday evening, June 15th. The return voyage from Cobourg, that beautiful spot on the north shore of Lake Ontario, where the picnic was held, was enjoyed by everyone.

The steamer was due to leave at eight o'clock in the morning, but owing to the threatened ducking in the lake of Commodore Jerry Burns by some of the old timers because the tables for the euchre party had not arrived, the departure was necessarily delayed for half an hour. After a great deal of telephoning the tables finally came and "Jerry's Sunday suit" was saved a wetting. The Corona got away with over a thousand on board which was the biggest representation of grocers that ever left Toronto at one time on pleasure bent. Among the crowd were seen many of the old time grocers of Toronto who have grown grey in the service and who know something about what it means to have been a "knight of the white apron" forty and fifty years ago when the grocery store was a meeting place for the "lights of the community.'

Ideal Weather Prevails

The day was marked by wonderful blue sky and sunshine. Although Old Sol was doing his utmost to make "things hot" there was a lovely breeze sweeping over the lake which was especially appreciated by those who sought the seclusion of the hurricane deck.

Some of the live wires who were responsible for the success of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Picnic at Cobourg, W. Nichol, F. Bible, Harry McDonald and Jerry Barns.

The Ladies' 100 yard dash at the Toronto Retail Grocers' Picnic at Cobourg.

There was something doing every minute of the entire day from the time the Corona cleared her moorings until she ended her homeward stretch. On the journey out under the leadership of Jerry Burns, Donald McLean, Bill Nichol, David Bell, Donald Nicholson, Harry McDonald, John Oldham, E. Towler and other live wires, many games and guessing contests were played. "Billy" Miller, the genial secretary of the R.M.A. was here, there and everywhere with his megaphone announcing the various games and incidentally looking after stray kiddies, mislaid purses and night keys.

Wins a Computing Scale

One of the features was the marble throwing contest, the prize being a computing scale donated by Tom Ferguson of the Canada Scale and Slicer Co. This was hotly contested, and when all the grocers had tried their luck, it was discovered that there was a tie between J. P. Yeoman and George Frost, who succeeded in tossing four marbles out of the possible five into the barrel. A second try left them in the same position, but the third time J. P. Yeoman, 194 Uxbridge Street, managed to carry off the scale. Then followed several marble tossing games in which the fair sex and the kiddies entered with much glee.

In another section of the boat, someone started to tickle the piano and many just couldn't "make their feet behave." To the strains of "Turkey in the Straw," or something or other, the call for "ladies in the middle, gents all round," soon had the dancers in a merry whirl.

The Stay at Cobourg

The Corona arrived at Cobourg at noon and after partaking of lunch, the crowd wended their way to Victoria Park where a number of events were run off, followed by a baseball game staged between the grocers and travellers, the latter winning by a score of 17 to 7 in 4½ innings. The grocers however promise to give a return match, and Henry McDonald says that they will "eat 'em alive" and could have done it yesterday only the steamer's warning them it was time to make the boat, stopped the game just as Harry was warming up to some fast curves.

The athletic events were numerous and went off without a hitch. There were races and prizes for everyone, among them being the grocers' 100 yard dash with Geo. Routliff carrying off first prize, a case of grape juice, and N. J. Bryant, P. Bone and J. L. Huse taking the next bonors.

In the grocery clerks' race the first prize went to H. Stanfield and the second to E. Needham. The ladies went into the events with much enthusiasm, Miss Maguire taking home a 98 pound bag of flour in the lady clerks' race, with Miss Aiken and Miss Thompson second and third.

In the 100 yard handicap the first prize went to J. L. Hulse, second to W. Nichol and third J. Needham.

The ladies (Grocers' wives) again scored in the shoe race when Mrs. Taylor captured the first prize of three dozen packages of soup and the second and third prizes went to Mrs. Dumbell and Mrs. Dalleous. Likewise in the 75 yard dash Mrs. Taylor was again the richer by five packages of Clean-a-car, having won the first prize with Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Dumbell a close second and third.

The homeward trip was a continuation of games and sports of various kinds and amid three cheers and a tiger for the hard working committee, the outing was declared to be the best ever put over by the Toronto Retail Grocers. Already plans are being laid for next year's picnic.

Sask. R.M.A. Draws Record Crowd

Eighth Annual Meeting of the Association Is Marked by Much Enthusiasm, and Timely, Interesting Addresses—One Hundred Per Cent of the Merchants in Saskatchewan Have Weathered the Storm of Business Depression—The President's Address

By Staff Correspondent

SASKATOON, June 20.—The eighth annual convention of the Saskatchewan Provincial Branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada was called to order at 10 o'clock, Tuesday, June 14, in the Byers-Butler Hall, Saskatoon.

S. D. McMicken, Provincial President, was in the chair, and in excellent form. The delegates at the morning session exceeded in numbers any convention record to date, and they continued to roll in all day from the furthermost corners of the great Province of Saskatchewan. Many more arrived for the trade section meetings which occupied the whole of Wednesday, June 15th.

The Mayor's Welcome.

His Worship the Mayor of Saskatoon, Dr. A. MacG. Young, tendered a most hearty welcome to the visitors, which was further amplified by Harley Henry, president of the Saskatoon Chamber of Commerce. G. Garfield Wray, boot and shoe merchant of Regina, replied to the kindly addresses of welcome.

In his address of welcome, Mayor Young showed a remarkable degree of familiarity with merchandising. He made an expert analysis of past and present market conditions, mentioning that the merchants were not alone when they faced a "buyer's" market, as the municipalities found they were in the identical position when they stepped out to sell their debentures.

"Considering the troublous time we have been through," said his worship, "Saskatchewan municipalities have made a surprisingly good showing, although in two or three instances municipalities had defaulted in their bonds. This merely should give a lesson to all merchants, many of whom are also municipal officers, to play the safe game in municipal finance as they did in their own business. And I urge you," said the doctor, "to accept such municipal office as the electors will give you. You owe a duty to the country to accept the highest responsibility of citizenship."

Sask. Merchants Weather Storm.

Mr. Henry mentioned that in Saskatchewan almost 100 per cent. of the merchants had managed to weather the storm, and by the look of the crops, there would be smooth water ahead for them. "The watch and wait policy has been played now as far as it pays to do it. The new watchword for you merchants and for us all to 'go get 'em' "

The President's Remarks.

The president's address was a modest one. Mr. McMicken stated that he knew that the secretary had covered of Moose Jaw, who presided at all the meetings of the Saskatchewan R. M. A. convention.

everything pertaining to Saskatchewan and the Dominion President, J. A. Banfield, would report Dominion progress. Therefore he contented himself with a few remarks from brief notes.

Mr. McMicken suffered a most severe loss by fire in Moose Jaw within recent weeks and he has a gang of thirty workmen building him a new store, "and there's only one thing on earth that could have pried me away from superintending that work," said the president, "and that is the work of the R. M. A." Mr. McMicken mentioned that nine executive sessions had been held, two sessions with the Government, one with the wholesale grocers, and one with the Board of Commerce. He spoke most enthusiastically about the spirit of fairness with which the wholesale grocers joined the organized retailers towards settling various contentious points, also the increasing disposition on the part of the Government of Saskatchewan to lend a sympathetic and attentive ear to any suggestions from the Retail Merchants' Association. The president states that an effort is being made to bring the retailers in the four Western Provinces and the Wholesale Grocers' Guild covering the same territory into closer harmony. Great progress along these lines has been made.

Secretary's Report.

The secretary's report certainly proves that the past year was a history-maker in the annals of Saskatchewan Association work.

The secretary, F. E. Raymond, received a most flattering ovation when he took the floor.

"In connection with the matter of making the work of the association more widely known it is my hope during the coming year to be able to arrange for meetings at different points throughout the province, to which merchants from the adjoining towns would be invited, these meetings to be addressed by different members of the executive, and such other speakers as we are able to provide for, from time to time," said the secretary of the Saskatchewan R. M. A. in his report to the annual convention.

"As in the case of the Luxury Tax the provincial office has had a vast amount of work to do in furnishing information regarding the application of the Sales Tax and in acting as a third party in the settlement of disputes between our members and some supply houses, who through a misunderstanding of the regulations had assessed the tax in error, or had perhaps charged an excessive amount. We have also been the means of adjusting to the entire satisfaction of all concerned a number of disputes which some of our members have had with the department at Ottawa, regarding the application of the Sales Tax.

Meetings of the Year.

During the year eight provincial executive meetings have been held. On June 11th, the day following the close of our convention, the executive proceeded to Regina for the purpose among other things of meeting the Government ministers.

Discontinue Branch Offices

Another important step taken at this meeting was the decision to discontinue the district branch movement and to close the offices at Assiniboia and Kerrobert.

This form of organization had been closely watched up to this time and everything possible was done to make it the success that we had hoped for, but we were doomed to disappointment.

Our gross loss in the operation of the Assiniboia branch was $2,464.89.

In the case of Kerrobert which branch was started in January, 1920, our gross loss was $2,347.48. It was estimated that for the coming year the cost of carrying on this work would in the case of each branch amount to approximately $4,500.00, which would mean 180 district members paying a fee of $25. As we had been carrying on in the Assiniboia district since June, 1919, and as our membership at the time the branch was closed was only 70, we could not see much hope of realizing the necessary amount. I feel convinced that if it had been possible to make this plan of organization a success, the two men we had employed would have done so.

Wholesalers Meet Retailers.

Another meeting of very considerable importance to the grocery trade not only of this province, but of all three prairie provinces at least, was held in the Board of Trade Rooms, Regina, on April 12th. Upon this occasion a committee representing the retail grocers, together with the remaining members of the provincial executive, met the representatives of the wholesale grocery houses operating in Saskatchewan.

This meeting was important both from the standpoint of results obtained and the fact that it was a step in the direction of closer co-operation between these two classes of business. A copy of the minutes of this meeting has been sent to the provincial secretaries for the Provinces of Manitoba and Alberta with a request that steps be taken to secure the endorsement of the wholesale houses there, although this is presumed to have already been given effect by the fact that the resolutions passed at Regina were endorsed by a meeting of the Prairie Provinces Wholesale Grocers' Association held in Winnipeg a week or two later. Another meeting to which all wholesale grocers selling in Saskatchewan have been invited regardless as to whether or not they have a house located here, has been arranged for in connection with this convention.

New Fire Insurance Organization.

One other important move made during the year was the arrangement entered into with the Northwestern Mutual Fire Association of Seattle, Washington, which company absorbed our own company, the Retail Merchants' Mutual Fire Insurance Company on December 1st, 1920. Under this arrangement all policies in force with the Retail Merchants' Mutual Fire Insurance Company were re-insured in the Northwestern Mutual from that date. On this business, as well as upon all new business written since, the Northwestern, through the Retail Merchants' Underwriters Agency, a purely Canadian institution, have allowed a dividend for the first 2 months of 35 per cent. and since that time 40 per cent. of the earned premium.

Praise For Organizers.

A large amount of credit is due to our two organizers, Mr. G. W. Anderson and Mr. W. L. McQuarrie for the efficient manner in which they carried on their work, which resulted in an increased membership, in spite of depressed conditions and an increased fee. Our membership at the close of 1919 was 1944 and at the close of 1920 it stood at 2,157, an increase of 213 for the year. Meetings were held in a large number of towns throughout their respective territories with good results and in a number of cases active local organizations have been formed, which give promise of good results to the local merchants.

Following the luncheon hour, the delegates were guests of the local merchants and the United Commercial Travellers' Association in a delightful motor drive around the "miracle city." The Dominion Government Forestry Farm was visited, where Mr. McLean, the officer in charge, explained the Government's plan of assisting in the forestration of Saskatchewan and the beautifying of rural homes. Then the University of Saskatchewan was visited and an address was listened to in the new physics lecture room. The various departments of the University work were thrown on the screen and the delegates were instructed on the methods by which they could assist the Government to conquer field and garden pests and increase the prosperity of their neighborhood. Next the party visited the great plant of the "Quaker Oats" and "Quaker Flour Mills." Every process and operation was explained by well-informed guides..

"A New Line of Endeavor"

Following the drive, an excellent address was given by Dean Rutherford of the University of Saskatchewan on "A new line of endeavor for the Retail Merchant." Briefly Prof. Rutherford's address followed the past periods of Saskatchewan history, when Mr. McKay, at the Indian Head Experimental Station many years ago first introduced the present prairie summer fallow procedure to conserve moisture and ensure crops. As the grass roots and fibre of the soil were thus destroyed, the land was un-bound and commenced to drift and blow. To-day the necessity is to grow binding crops of sweet clover, brome grass, and western rye which further means stock, not wheat. He urged the retailers to help their customers to sense the new stage that this prairie is now entering and get down to sure and profitable mixed farming instead of continuing to gamble on wheat, with lean years, extended credits and failure.

"A Great Victory for the Retailer"

J. A. Banfield, Dominion President of R. M. A., in Addressing the Saskatchewan Branch at Its Annual Meeting, Says that the Government Is Now Beginning to Recognize the Retailer—Some Things the Association Has Yet to Do

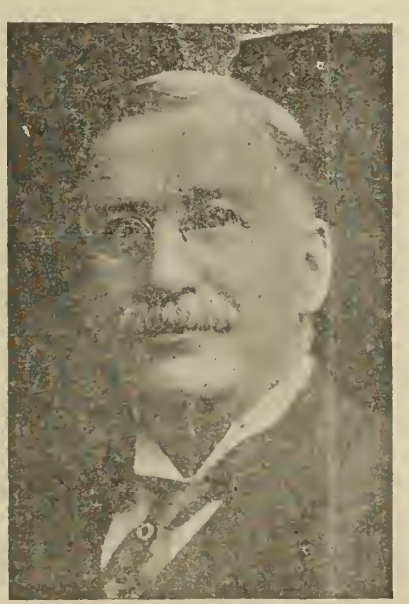
By Staff Correspondent

SASKATOON, June 20.—J. A. Banfield, the Dominion president, in addressing the meeting, traced briefly the history of the R. M. A. to date. What it had accomplished, what it was still fighting for, and the need for greater membership and keener interest.

"All legislation is of vital interest to the retailer," said the president. "Not a bill is put through the house that does not indirectly, and most often directly affect the retailer. No matter what the government does, it affects the consumer, and the retailer is the one immediately in contact with the public, so must bear the displeasure and suspicion, if any one must."

Recognizing the Retailer

At the same time Mr. Banfield pointed out that the Government is beginning to recognize the retailer as a factor to be reckoned with, and always one body that stands for anything fair and square. It is always in favor of anything that, as the president expressed it, "teeters," not all down on one end. The retailers are now called into conference by the government on matters concerning them. "The last budget," said the speaker, "is the retailer's budget. It agrees with the recommendation that we made to the government. It is fair, equitable, and efficient. When the retailers were called into conference along with the wholesalers, and manufacturers, we got the cold shoulder from the latter," said Mr. Banfield. "I met one manufacturer, who, when I asked him if he was going to the conference, smiled and said, No. Why, said he, we got a circular a month ago outlining what the manufacturers had decided to do. Notwithstanding which," smiled Mr. Banfield, "the retail counsel prevailed."



J. A. BANFIELD,
President of the Dominion R. M. A., addressed the retail merchants of Saskatchewan at their annual convention on the work the Dominion Association is accomplishing.

"When the retailers said that the tax should be collected at the fountain head —and it was so decreed—that was a great victory for your association," said Mr. Banfield, "and after it was all over, Sir Henry Drayton thanked the association for the help it had given."

He commended the Ottawa merchants most highly, saying, "Whenever it has been necessary to have a delegation of merchants go at short notice before any body at Ottawa, the Ottawa merchants have responded most magnificently. We could have all we needed on 15 minutes' notice. They never spare themselves when association affairs can profit by their effort."

Mr. Banfield remarked that those white haired boys, those paragons of virtue whom the Board of Commerce had occasionally uncovered; those who sold for cost plus on the rising market, or who through inefficiency had never managed to make a profit, where are they now?—down and out—on Bradstreets and Dunns' bankrupt list. They perished "unwept, unhonored, and unsung." The president touched on the turnover tax, saying that the government never had made provision for the retailer passing-on the tax, as was the case with the wholesaler and manufacturer. "How would you collect a turnover tax on a Greek restaurant, where the proprietor's hip pocket is his bank?" demanded the president.

Things Yet To Be Done

Among the things yet to be done Mr. Banfield mentioned an efficacious "fraudulent advertising act," one that would make the manager co-responsible with the proprietor for misrepresentation. The present act has been found weak in this respect. The trading stamp act is also in need of extension to include guessing contests, certificates and rebates. "The latter are a continuous uncertain outstanding liability," said the speaker. "Gambling is rampant. Three card monte and the like should be repressible by law."

The onus of responsibility in the case of adulteration, as of maple products should also be taken off the tradesman. All such produce as hay in bales, etc., should where practicable, bear the name of the producer. A department for scientific research should be authorized and organized at once. The subject of foreign purchases was touched upon.

Mr. McMicken humorously cited a recent case he had observed where an attractive card distributed by a manufacturer bearing the legend, "Buy in Canada," also bore the small note "Printed in Albany."

Parcel post rates also came in for the attention of the Dominion President. "It is a disgrace that letters must bear a portion of the expense of carrying the packages of your mail order competitor," said he. "Each department should stand on its own feet. It is unjust that any parcels should be carried in the post office at less than the actual cost of giving that service."

Pleads for Greater Membership

In pleading for greater membership the speaker said, "Don't under-estimate the value of the smallest dealer. You know that he who is not for you is against you In a petition, the man with only a peanut stand, may cancel your vote—even though your business is in the hundreds of thousands. Get them all in with you. Every member get a member."

Swift Current Man Heads Sask. R.M.A.

Final day's session of the Sask. R. M. A. convention is marked by interesting discussion, passing of resolutions and the election of new officers—the new Bankruptcy Law is explained by Professor Arthur Moxon.

By Staff Correspondent

THE FINAL day's meetings of the convention were marked by addresses on the income tax, the bankruptcy act and a debate on merits of a cash business versus a credit business. A number of resolutions were passed, as well as new officers elected for the ensuing year. The convention will be held in Regina next year.

Income Tax Returns

Bert R. Masecar, official auditor of the Saskatchewan Board, stated that the questions in regard to the same, mostly centered round the difficulty of writing stock in a falling market. Profits, it was explained, were only cash profits. Whatever they put through their books as their turnover, they had got to treat as their sales. Amusing illustrations of the ways of the income tax authorities were given by the president, who had waited a whole year for a reply to a letter and then was fined $1,800 for not making his return, reduced to $10, all because he had not the information he sought after.

New Bankruptcy Law

Professor Arthur Moxon gave an address on the bankruptcy law of Canada. The new act, he said, was "made in Winnipeg" and was probably one of the most admirably drawn pieces of legislation that had emanated from the Canadian parliament since Confederation. It was something lawyers tried to get for a number of years, and it was largely due to the intelligent efforts of wholesalers and traders of Western Canada they had now their excellent legislation on the statute books. It was honestly and fairly designed to give to the commercial community exactly what the community wanted, not what the lawyers wanted. If statute was not satisfactory and did not do its work it was not because the lawyers interfered, but it was because the facts of business and the facts of human nature were too complicated to at once allow them to draft an act that would be humanly perfect.

Affects Status

The statute was going to be of very considerable importance to the wholesalers and retailers in the course of the next ten years, Prof. Moxon said. It was drawn fairly lucidly and carefully for a statute and would be in the hands of every intelligent merchant in the community, so that when the necessity came for doing the simple things required of the act, making claims in the assets of other people, etc., would show him just what his rights were without any necessity of referring to a solicitor or going to a solicitor and proving his claim. The act made a very important departure in their whole system of treating insolvency. He showed how the law affected the status of the individual. The man who had a receiving order of bankruptcy made against him involuntarily lost to a certain extent the status of an ordinary individual.

The Resolutions

Among the resolutions was one to instruct the secretary to supply Ottawa with a copy of the convention deliberations, for filing in the archives, and publishing if they thought desirable.

An attempt to add the chairmen of the trade sections to the Provincial Board was opposed by Mr. Morton, president of the Regina section.

A resolution, fathered by the Drug Section, complimented the government on the new narcotics act, stating that they realize that it is not aimed at the legitimate drug trades, but against pedlars, and pledges the drug trade to assist in every way to keep the spirit of the law and assist in its enforcement. (The Pharmaceutical Association in Saskatchewan has already obtained twenty-two convictions for infractions of the liquor act and are determined to maintain the high character of the profession.) A suggestion was attached to the resolution asking the Dominion Secretary to lend his assistance toward having the Government supply uniform forms for the entering of the data required by the act.

An effort was made to have piano salesmen excluded from the Hawkers' and Pedlars' Act, so that they would not be compelled to pay $100 Provincial license fee to travel around selling pianos. One speaker in favor of the exemption stated that the cost of breaking in and experimenting with green salesmen would be prohibitive and the license is non-transferable. A speaker against any exemption said that the travelling piano salesmen took business out of each district and brought nothing to the district, and that all reputable piano dealers already had local agents who contributed to the communities, etc. The resolution was defeated.

The omnipresent resolution favoring ade in Canada" goods (in the abstract) s duly moved, seconded and passed nimously. It would be a hardy soul, eed, who would rise to his feet and e "nay." The discomforting thought hat in spite of such resolutions our ple continue to pile up the adverse le balance, having quite decided that ing spoken patronizingly of the article Canadian manufacture, it is then in r to patronize the foreign manufact-.

Officers Elected

he new officers are:

President, Jack Wood, men's furnishings, Swift Current, Sask.; First Vice-President, T. H. Masterson, Chevrolet dealer, Regina, Sask.; Second Vice-President, G. Garfield Wray, shoe merchant, Regina, Sask.; Treasurer, S. E. Fawcett, hardware and sporting goods dealer, Saskatoon; Honorable Secretary, Ralph Miller, men's furnishings, Prince Albert, Sask.; Permanent Secretary, F. E. Raymond, Saskatoon.

The whole convention was a tribute to the good work done by the Saskatchewan Board Staff, the trade section meetings entailing an enormous amount of work and organization ability. Mr. Raymond had able assistance from his assistant, H. J. Beveridge; H. T. Pizzey, secretary to the Implement and Auto Sections; F. L. Phillips, collection department; F. E. Bellow, accountant; Miss E. Evans, insurance; R. B. Evans, publicity; Charles Woodman, traffic, and the two genial organizers, W. L. McQuarrie, who serves the North, and George W. Anderson, who serves the merchants in the South half of Saskatchewan.

What Is Your Cost of Doing Business?

Few grocers can answer this question definitely. Too many can only state the percentage approximately, but the average retailer cannot dare to go it blindly, not knowing exactly what it is costing him to carry on.

(By Henry Johnston Jr.)

HE famous statistician, Babson of Boston, in collabration with others, ntly published a table showing his me of the cost of doing business in us lines. The table is valuable not uch, perhaps, for what it shows as what it indicates mainly to grocers; t indicates a very high cost for ers. More important, it shows some ne things grocers overlook. But I urprised to find that this tabulation, h passed in review not only of Babbut of many other experts, takes no unt of interest charge on capital oyed. Maybe the fact that the shers of it were included in an astion of newspaper men accounts his strange omission.

metimes I wonder where these folks heir facts. Here we have a tabulatwhich shows department stores as ting under an expense that is less that of drugs, men's clothing, furn- shoes and jewelry stores. Yet the show that the department store carexpenses that are higher than any ese. Nor are these facts stabbed taken at random. They have been ed from long study, over a long by many people in various localand confirmed by my own close vation and inquiry into actual data ver the country—I may say over ontinent. I shall set in parallel ns these figures and my own, thus:

	This Tabulation	My Figures
tment Stores	23.05 p.c.	26.50 p.c.
ry Stores	18.91 p.c.	16.66 p.c.
Stores	25.65 p.c.	24.50 p.c.
Clothing	23.27 p.c.	23.50 p.c.
ture	27.51 p.c.	24.00 p.c
ware Stores	20.41 p.c.	19.40 p.c.
	24.22 p.c.	23.50 p.c.
ry	26.81 p.c.	26.00 p.c.

n rather well satisfied that my s are more nearly correct along hole line, but particularly as re- department stores and grocery stores; because of these I have made exhaustive study; and perhaps the most vital lesson for a grocer to draw from such comparative study is that the department store labors under an expense nearly 10 per cent more on the average sally makes money, while only 5 per than the grocer and yet almost univercent of grocers are money makers. This shows the value of knowing all expenses and other burdens, the way the department store man knows them—facing each issue in the business—rather than guessing at them the way the average grocer does.

Do You Know Your Expense?

I ask this question pointedly of grocers everywhere—in meetings and individually—and I find few that can tell me anything definitely. I ask men everywhere: "What was your expense in 1920?" Occasionally one says: "About thirteen per cent;" but why "about?" How can a man end up a year and not take inventory and go back over his accounts to KNOW just where he came out in 1920? How can men DARE thus to go it blind with their own vital interests, taking gambling chances with their present and future? Search me. Not only do I give it up—I gave it up years ago!

Here now are the tabulations regarding the grocer as given by the authorities I am writing about:

Rent	3.07 p.c.
Salaries	8.46 p.c.
Advertising	1.83 p.c.
Heat and light	.39 p.c.
Delivery	2.53 p.c.
Supplies	.37 p.c.
Ins. and Taxes	.58 p.c.
Gen. Expense	.45 p.c.
Deprec. and Shrink	.76 p.c.
Bad Debts	.47 p.c.
	18.91 p.c.

Now I know two things: that no such average as 1,83 per cent goes into advertising in grocery stores. I know a number of grocers who operate on expenses more than five per cent under this total. This being so, the others would have to run on figures far in excess of those given to bring up the average to any such figures as 19 per cent. Let me therefore change a figure or two to conform to what I know prevails quite commonly:

Rent	1.50 p.c.
Salaries	6.50 p.c.
Advertising	.25 p.c.

Leaving other figures as given, and I feel that they are not far from correct, at least as guides to the rest of us, we shall find that my alteration results in a total of 13.80 per cent. To that I should add .20 per cent—one fifth per cent—for interest; and the total will be 14 per cent. I think these fellows must have confined their investigations to their own family grocers, in some high brow long-credit, excessive service localities to get any such extravagant average as they got. But at that how they omitted the vital charge for interest on capital is a mystery to me.

The Minutest Accuracy is What You Want

Of course, if those men were going to err either way, the way to o it was by overstatement rather than understatement. It is far better that you go on the theory that your expenses are heavy than that you kid yourself into the belief that they are light. But why have either under or overstatement when the way to KNOW is so very simple?

And so now I ask you the question with which this article is headed: What are YOUR Expenses? If you are not in position to answer right off the bat, to the fraction of a cent, get busy and find out. If you did not learn exactly what it had cost you to operate in 1920, including everything, do it now. Then

DECLINES AND BUSINESS

ONE of the perplexing problems that the retail merchant is grappling with, is, how far will declines go? This is a big question and one that is difficult to answer. There are some in the trade that seem to think that prices have about reached bed rock, while there are others who state that prices will reach even below the 1914 level, basing their theory on the fact that no stability in the markets can be expected until the old law of supply and demand is working to full capacity.

Insofar as Canada's overseas trade is concerned there does not appear to be any near mprovement. Europe apparently does not want our supplus production, at least, at the high figures, simply because she is not in a financial condition to accept it. On the other hand Europe is already looking to this country as for their products. They are working twenty-four hours a day at a greatly reduced wage scale in order that goods can be manufactured at low prices, shipped into this country and eventually become a keen competitor in our home market with our own manufacturers.

Speaking generally of foodstuffs, liquidation of stocks appears to be fairly well completed, although there still appears to be depressed stocks offered. These are sold retail at a lower price than manufacturers' lists. Bargains, however, are becoming fewer and harder to find especially from the manufacturers. The great wave of price cutting on the part of wholesalers, also seems to have about run its course, although there are spasmodic breakings out—like the tale end of an epidemic of measles—of wholesalers continuing to cut the price on certain articles.

Retailers' shelves are commencing to take on a lean and hungry look, and with the merchants in a position to restock at the lower level, there is no sane reason why business—that is home business—should not be greatly stimulated. The retail merchant does not need to worry about prices. The big thing is to get business started on the home stretch with market baskets filled to overflowing and keep it there.

The remedy for the sleeping sickness that business has been experiencing lies altogether in the hands of the retail merchant. The public has been clammering for lower prices. These lower prices are now in effect and together with systematic salesmanship, will soon bring a slothful business out of the rut.

HOW THE STRIKE AFFECTS YOU

APART perhaps from freight rates, there is no single factor which so universally affects the price of every commodity in use at the present day as the cost of printing. Every price list, catalogue, booklet, handbill, circular letter, price card, newspaper advertisement, display card, all sales literature cost money for printing, which costs has to be covered in the price charged for the various commodities you sell.

Any increase, therefore, in the cost of printing affects the cost of every one of the items mentioned and must therefore ultimately raise the price of every article sold by the retail merchant. Any such increase at the present time is bound to have a restrictive tendency upon sales and is therefore detrimental to the merchant's interests. If he is forced to absorb the extra cost himself it affects his pocket still more directly.

You are therefore vitally interested in the outcome of the printers' strike for a forty-four hour week and increased wages amounting in all to an advance of about 40 per cent. This would inevitably result in an increase both in your overhead expense in the prices you pay for goods and thus it cannot fail to prejudicially affect your interests.

The forty-four hour week will benefit no one. If a man is only willing work forty-four hours, he will earn less for himself and for his employers than if he worked forty-eight hours. The great need the world over is for elimination of wastes and increase in production.

New Brunswick Wholesale Grocer Praises Convention

St. John, N. B., June 17 (Special).—A. P. Paterson, of this city, who was elected one of the vice-presidents of the Wholesaler Grocers' Association at Quebec this week, returned yesterday. He was enthusiastic over the benefits that he feels the wholesale grocers of the dominion will receive as a result of the convention, which he termed one of the most successful ever held.

After having discussed conditions with men from all parts of Canada, Mr. Paterson said he returned home firmly convinced that nowhere were finincial conditions more secure or business enterprise more stable than in the province of New Brunswick. Although the present depression is felt by grocers all over Canada, Mr. Paterson is optimistic for the future and feels sure that the country is due for a great reawakening of trade at an early date. He said he noticed that lumber was starting to move and expressed the opinion that so soon as the railway facilities in England were again in operation, the stagnation of the lumber markets, the general trade of the country would soon return to normal condition.

Mr. Paterson expressed himself as being pleased with the hospitality extended to the visitors by the people of Quebec.

never let a year end pass again without inventorying and knowing at least once annually just where you stand.

Just by the way of showing you what can be done, right now, in this year 1921, let me outline a story:

The town of Norfolk, Nabraska, has 8000 people. Therein is a grocer who operates a cash-and-carry grocery store on the main street in a store 22 by 45 feet. Five days in the week, he runs it with one man for help. On Saturdays he brings in two women and another man—five altogether on Saturdays. His sales last year were $125,000. His margin averages 13 per cent. His expense is 8½ per cent. His net profit, therefore, is 4½ per cent. He turned his stock last year just about 27 times, having on hand less than $4400 worth of groceries. His net earnings last year were $5625, this being net velvet since his own salary and all other expenses are including in the 8½ per cent. expense. Thus he made 127.84 per cent. plus on his entire stock investment in the year.

Is he alone—has he no competition—and can competition live? O yes! Directly across the street, in the same block, on the corner is a large general store doing $435,000 total, $225,000 of which is groceries. That store has an expense account that averages more than our little man's total margin, yet there is business for both. A few doors on the other side is the fancy grocer of the town, a man who has been in business for many years, caters to the highest class trade, has a beautiful store and renders the most exacting services regardless of cost or price. His customers are not interested in cost. They want to be waited on and will pay the price.

Fun of it is that these men all belong to the same association, are constant attendants at meetings and are excellent personal friends. Each man knows his business. Each knows to a decimal what it costs him to operate. Each knows the limitations of the kind of business he does and has the good sense not to try to do more than one kind of business, nor to be jealous of his neighbor who does another kind. All these men are good community servants good citizens—money makers. I expect to tell you how and to what extent the cash and-carry man piles up his money later on. Meantime, answer my question: What are YOUR Expenses?

Suggestions Wait on Fuller Information

A Minnesota man writes me thusly: Dear Sir:— I have been reading your articles for some time and surely find many good points to think about in them. We have been here what we call bargain day the first Wednesday in every month. Each store in town puts on specials for that day, and we send about 5000 circulars to the surrounding community. Last bargain day, April, our sales were $675. Mar. 2, they were $450 February 2nd, $950. Some days we have bigger items and the volume runs more. Last year my business was $72,300. Stock and fixtures January 1st about $14,000 (stock about $4000) but have reduced some since then. I do nothing but a strictly cash business so aim to sell on rather close margins. I have the output of a dairy so sell milk and cream in the store, also have a delivery wagon so deliver goods twice a day—sent C.O.D. unless paid for when ordered. I could do a bigger business if I gave credit, but feel I'm better off to do a little less and get the dough. I do quite a little advertising, also by way of sample packages of coffee, as I do my own roasting. Any suggestions will certainly be appreciated. Yours, ...

My friend will have to give me more details. What expense? Give details of it—do you pay a salary to yourself—how much—what rent—what depreciation allowance—do you charge interest and how much does that figure? I can only say now that, taking a margin of 18 per cent on sales, this record shows a turnover 22 times a year, and that is fine. I think it is all fine, in fact; but cannot give further suggestions until I have something more to work on. Will you write again promptly? Please.

THE MENACE OF THE PEDLAR

Third of the series by A. B. C.

WHEN dealing with the business of the pedlar, the merchant must not overlook the fact that the pedlar is aggressive and goes after business most energetically. As pointed out in the last article, he usually makes a feature of tea because he can buy tea at any price and sell it cheaply and and still make substantial profit.

One merchant with whom the writer over this point claims that where most dealers fall down in the matter of tea is in their endeavor to purchase as cheap a grade of tea as possible. A low grade tea has not only poor flavor but it gives few cups to the pound. It does not last long. The housewife is readily induced to try the tea offered by the at the door because it is cheap.

To overcome this it is up to the merchant in the first place to push the sale of high grade tea. He must sell a tea that the pedlar cannot or does not duplicate. He must know the various teas he has in stock and when once a customer has been satisfied, he must be in a position to supply the same blend and the same quality tea with each succeeding sale. By pushing high grade teas his customers get more cups to the pound, are much better satisfied, and will be more inclined to refuse the blandishments of the pedlar who knocks at the door. Tea is not an expensive article considering the number of cups to the pound and most people can afford good tea. Retailers should work strongly for quality and uniform blend. This means that merchants must be careful where they purchase their tea. They should buy from sources where they can get quality and blend duplicated from week to week, month to month and year to year as nearly as it is possible to do so.

The next article of the series will deal with actual instances showing how careless the pedlar is with his tea quality, flavor and blend.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

Montreal, June 22.—The features of the grocery markets this week is the decline in the price of granulated sugar which has come in three drops amounting to $1.25 per hundred. The raw market is weak and prices in the United States have dropped to the point where the Canadian refiners have had to bring their prices down. Local wholesalers have also reduced the price of molasses. This market shows weakness but corn syrups are firm in price. The vegetable market shows much activity with the first supplies of local cucumbers and cabbage coming to the market and lower prices quoted on both as a result. The most notable feature however is the big drop in the price of new and old potatoes. Oranges are firm in price with a preference for the smaller sizes. The rice market shows improvement with an advance on Rangoon.

CANNED GOODS.—Local wholesalers have again advanced the price of sockeye salmon. Clover leaf ½'s are quoted at $2.70, an advance of ten cents and the tall and flat one pound tins are now quoted at $5.00, an advance of 40 and 25 cents. Other sockeye brands are selling at $4.90. Canned fruits and vegetables are steady in price with a fairly active market.

New Potatoes Plentiful

VEGETABLES.—The feature of the vegetable market this week is the lower prices quoted on new potatoes. Dealers are quoting new potatoes in barrels of 190 lbs at $5.25 per barrel. The supply of new potatoes is plentiful and prices have dropped considerably during the past week. Old potatoes are also lower in price and quotations are ranging from 90 cents to $1 per bag. The first supplies of local cabbage and cucumbers are on the market and $5.50 per hamper is quoted for cucumbers. Lettuce, radishes and parsley are in big supply and prices are open. Tomatoes are a little lower this week. The season for the Floridas is over and Mississippi flats are selling at $2.00 per box.

Refined Sugar Lower

SUGAR.—Refined sugar has taken three drops during the past week which amounts to $1.25 per hundred. The price of sugar as quoted by the Canadian refiners is $9.25. The cause of this decline is the weakness of the raw market and the lower prices quoted in the United tes. On account of the weakness of sugar market buying is light, being y for immediate requirements.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 22.—The feature of the markets is the further reduction on refined sugar announced on Saturday last. Refiners business is practical at a standstill as little business has been transpiring direct from the refineries but it is now felt that as second hand parcels are about cleared up that refiners will soon resume operation. There are few price changes but there still appears to be some price cutting although there are not the number of bargains floating as a few weeks ago. Cereals are looking firm with a prospect for an advance on flaked wheat. Teas, coffees and nuts continue to maintain a firm tone. Dried fruits are also firmly held. Vegetables and fruits are in plentiful supply with prices tending easier.

Canned Goods Steady

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—Wholesalers and retailers are not showing any inclination to book futures and canners continue to maintain their waiting attitude. That is they state, that they do not intend to pack, except to the amount of orders received. On the surface this looks that canned vegetables are going to be a scarce commodity this coming season as the carry over will not be large, especially on tomatoes and peas. On the other hand, there appears to be sufficient canned fruits left from last season's pack to carry the trade through this next season even if the canners do not pack a can. But whether the canners carry out their present policy when the canning season opens, remains to be seen. in the matter of jams, the majority of manufacturers appear to have about cleaned up their large stock and are now busy with the new pack of strawberry, which some manufacturers are already offering on the market. Quotations listed below are more or less nominal as there still appears to be a considerable amount of price cutting.

NUTS.—The market for practically all nuts continue to maintain a strong tone. Stocks are rather small and in fact there is little shelled walnuts offered either on spot or in France. Manchurian shelled walnuts which were more or less standing still while the French market was advancing, now shows considerable strength with quotations on spot advanced to 60 cents per pound in case lots and five cents per pound higher in broken lots. Broken walnuts are also about five cents per pound higher.

Price Cutting on Cornflakes

PACKAGE GOODS.—As stated under this heading last week, a reduction was announced on corn flakes. This however was not a manufacturers' reduction, but a price offered by wholesalers; manufacturers continue to hold firmly to their ilst prices. Practically all wholesalers are offering cornflakes at prices below the lists. These prices range around $3.35 and $3.25 per case and we did hear of one house offering at $3.15 per case.

Sugar Makes Further Drop

SUGAR.—A further reduction of 50 cents per hundred on refined sugar was announced last Saturday, making a total of $1.25 for the week, which brings the price to Toronto basis of $9.54. Production at the refineries is practically at a standstill, but it is now felt with the elmination of second hand parcels a marked increase in business direct from the refineries will materialize. The raw sugar market continues unsettled with further declines during the week.

Teas Hold Firm

TEAS.—The strength that has characterized this market for some time continues to be much in evidence. Prices in primary markets have been steadily advancing, which is especially noticeable on the medium and finer grades of Ceylons. The Colombo market is also stronger. While no opening prices have yet been named on the second pickings of Japans, it is generally conceded that the prices will range on a par with last season's, which were considerably lower than the opening prices on firsts. There has been a fairly active demand, but there does not appear to be much buying of futures on the part of retailers, although some wholesalers report that they have been buying fairly heavy on the better grades.

REFLECTION CAST ON B. C. SALMON IS COMPLETELY DISPROVED

The serious aspersions cast by British importers on the quality of the gift of 25,000 cases of salmon, presented to the British Columbia Government to Great Britain during the war, have, as a result of investigation, been completely disproved. The derogatory statements, which were made by a member of a prominent London firm importing Canadian salmon and corroborated by the chairman of a section of the London Chamber of Commerce, were to the effect that the gift proved to contain a large percentage of chum and even of tainted salmon, which had to be destroyed.

These statements caused indignation in Canada and brought a strong protest from the British Columbia Packers' Association. An inquiry made by Mr. F. C. Wade, Agent-General for British Columbia, showing that the salmon had been made the subject of two independent investigations before its presentation to the war office and by several municipalities among which the fish had been distributed. The reflections cast upon British Columbia's gift have therefore fallen to the ground.

WINNIPEG MERCHANTS NOW HAVE ORGANIZATION CHART FOR MEMBERS

The retail merchants' association of Winnipeg has just got out an organization chart the character of which includes the various bodies of the organization, the trades and trade sections and an emblem in the upper left hand corner. The emblem which is in the form of a transfer will be used for the shop doors to indicate that the merchant is a member of the retail merchants' association. It is made up of a shield, two black beavers, green maple leaves, and the flag, the beavers signifying industry, the shield defence, the flag and leaves patriotism, and the acorn at the top of the [illegible] growing [illegible]

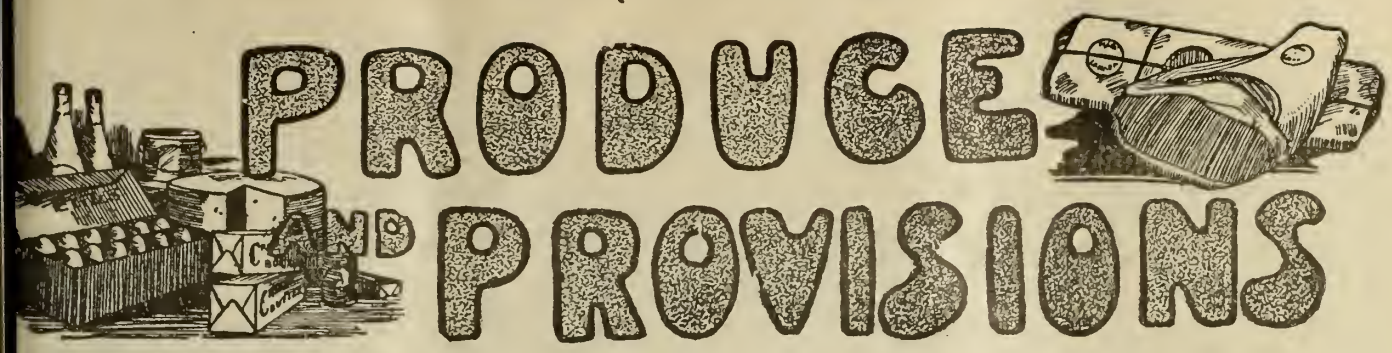
Prefers to sell Teas and Coffees in Packages Rather than in Bulk

VANCOUVER (Special).—J. L. McLeod, who spent many years in and around Regina in the grocery buisness consimated a deal recently that makes him proprietor of the Kerrisdale Grocery, at Kerrisdale Station, on the Lulu Island Electric Interurban from Vancouver. The business has been run by J. H. Johnson and this well-located, bright and attractive store has attracted a large trade. The business will be conducted along the same lines as formerly with one noteworthy feature.

Prefers the Brands

Contrary to the usual practice, Mr. McLeod does not believe in featuring his own teas and coffees. "I consider," said Mr. McLeod, that there are those manufacturing ground coffee and blending teas-importers and jobbers, who have more money to advertise their brands sub-standard. They are going to maintain their quality month after month year after year. I cannot do better. I cannot give better value to my customers than sell these advertised varieties. If the quality is maintained I shall continue to get repeat business at a fair margin of profit and should I have reason to imagine that the quality is not being maintained, I will drop the line and will not be dropping something that I have worked and talked and built. This would be the case with my own tea or coffee if I could not be sure of getting uniform quality at all times—as is the actual case.

"If a customer takes a dislike to her tea or coffee, she will drop the brand



rawberry Growers Did Not Receive as High a Price for Berries as Last Year

Packers are deterRined that prices they pay this year will permit them to put up a more reasonable priced product—apple yield in Okanagan district is expected to be heavy—the potato situation in B.C.

ANCOUVER (Special). — Last year he packers of strawberry, raspberry nd other varities of preserves and s contracted in advance for their t, and as a consequence found that were paying several cents higher the market at time of shipment. prices ranged from 18 to 24 cents strawberry.

t that time, as reported in "Canad- Grocer", the packers stated that this they would not contract but would the market price as set at the time supply and demand. The growers pleted a very complete organization fall, and at first insisted that they ld get 25 cents a pound for their wberries. This figure was not reach- nt they did sell the largest portion heir crop around 21 and 22 cents.

A More Reasonable Prodnct

Now the packers are just determined that the prices they pay this year will permit them to put up a more reasonable product. The prices they expect to pay are in the neighborhood of 7 and 8c per pound. It is stated that cans cost more at the coast here, than in Ontario, and it is a fact that sugar is 1 cent higher. It is expected that the growers will receive 12 to 13c per pound for crated berries. California packers are buying their strawberry requirements from Oregon and paying 4½ cents per pound delivered.

Large Apple Yield

From Governmental reports it is learned that a large yield of apples can be expected from the entire valley. The danger from frost is generally regarded as over. Some districts report acreage in tomatoes, and others an increase. The yield for the whole district will probably approximate that of last year. The Southern end of the Okanagan valley promises a big crop of apricots, but a small crop of cherries. The latter is attributed to cool, dull weather at blossoming time.

Potatoes Being Planted

In the Grand Forks and Kootenay districts more potatoes are being planted than was at first estimated. With a better organized body of potato growers in the province, the periodic cycles of unreasonably high prices, followed by ruinous seasons of total loss, can surely be straightened out. Last fall potatoes were being retailed at $20 per sack. In to-day's newspapers retailers are advertising potatoes at 35c per sack. The average procedure that potatoes growers have followed in former years has been to plant practically no potatoes following a market like the present and to rush in, following the consequent high prices and plant potatoes on every available bit of earth. It is comforting to the trade to read that some districts in B. C. are going to have good crops of potatoes next fall.

EGGS.—The feature of the egg market is the advance in the prices quoted due to the big demand for both export and domestic trade. The strength of the market is almost entirely due to the increased demand since the receipts are even larger than one week ago and much above those of last year. Selected fresh eggs are now selling as high as 40 cents per dozen.

FRESH MEATS.—Through the week there has been a sharp break in the prices paid for live hogs with an advance of from 3½ to 4 cents per pound, making the price for selects weighed off cars from $13.50 to $14.00 per hundred. This is attributed to the lighter offerings with a keener demand for supplies. Beef prices have remained steady. Prices on dressed hogs and fresh cuts of pork are advanced to cover the higher prices being paid for the live stock.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 22.—The produce and provision markets are marked by the precipitate advance in hog prices. The hog market has been showing upward tendencies for the past two weeks and in spite of the fact that packers were trying to hold prices at the lower level, the receipts were hardly sufficient to meet the demand and in consequence under stimulus of outside buying competition prices rose considerably. This condition is reflected on all hog products with the results that smoked meats, lard, shortening and cooked meats are also advanced in price. The butter market is steady to firmer. Cheese is higher while eggs continue to hold a strong position. Fish and poultry are unchanged.

Butter Prices Steady

Toronto.

BUTTER.—The butter market is fairly steady although there is a slightly firmer undertone. The general quotation on the best grade of creamery is 32 cents, but in some quarters 33 cents is asked. Creamery in cartons is bringing as high as 34 cents while No. 2 grades are quoted at 31 cents.

BUTTER—

market for hogs and an active demand cooked hams have taken an upward turn. Although at present there appears to be sufficient stocks to meet the demand, the supply is none too plentiful and as the season advances this no doubt will be more pronounced, mainly due to the fact that the receipts of hogs have been steadily decreasing for several weeks past. Quotations advaned during the week, making ordinary trimmed boiled hams 48 to 50 cents per pound and square trimmed 52 cents. Jellied ox tongue is slightly higher at 63 cents per pound.

CUT UPSIDE DOWN

Canadian Grocer regrets that in issue of June 17, there was an error in the Dominion Slicer Corporation's announcement. The cut of the slicer was shown inverted.

The Wild Carnival of High Prices is Over

The Printers' Unions of Toronto pay their dues and take their orders from their head office in the United States.

Some time ago they got instructions from their head office in Indianapolis, Ind., to demand shorter hours and more wages, and if these orders were not acceded to, to strike.

The Toronto Publishers and Employing Printers refused to grant these demands. So on June 1st, the Printers struck.

There is no use in the Toronto Printers, or any other body of men, blindly failing to realize that the wild carnival of High Prices is over.

If the members of the Printers' Union go out to buy boots to-day, they do not expect to pay more than they did a year ago.

They demand, and get, cheaper boots.

They are not willing to pay more for clothes, or foodstuffs, or any other commodity.

They expect to pay, and do pay, less.

And the public is not tolerant of any scheme or arrangement which is going to make its printing cost more. It is lower prices they are looking for. Why should printing costs advance, when prices of everything else are going down? That is why the Publishers and Employing Printers are resolutely and unalterably opposed to the granting of shorter hours and more pay, because it, of necessity, means dearer printing, and the public will not buy dearer printing.

That is why we are resisting and refusing to obey the mandate from the United States that the Local Printers demand more wages and shorter hours.

The Purchasing Agents' Association of Toronto at their meeting, held June 8th, 1921, passed the following resolution:

> "We endorse the attitude of the Toronto Typothetae in their efforts to prevent increased cost of printing and deplore the action of some Employing Printers in granting the Unions' demands, which, necessarily will result in an increased cost of production, when at this period economic conditions demand that production costs be lowered rather than increased."

The MacLean Publishing Company are fighting these unreasonable demands not only in the interests of their own business (and this includes the employees who are on strike) but in the interests of business conditions generally.

Good times and healthy business conditions cannot return unless we all do our part to get through the readjustment period in a sane and reasonable way.

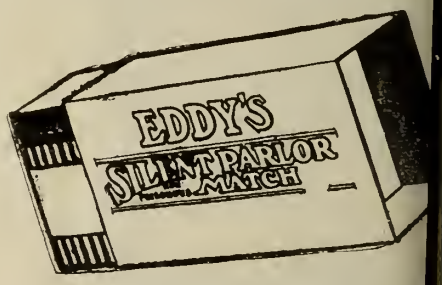
Selling Products Your Customers Know



EDDY'S Matches and EDDY'S Indurated Fibreware are known to everybody, everywhere in Canada.

With most people, to think of Matches is to think of EDDY'S. The Eddy name to them is a symbol of that Match quality which some seventy years of match-making experience has made possible.

EDDY'S Indurated Fibreware Utensils are equally popular—and deservedly so. Lighter than wood and more durable than metal, they are ideal for household or farm use. Leak-proof, bulge-proof, rust-proof.

EDDY'S PRODUCTS are made in Canada, by Canadians, for Canadians.

This receipt shows the amount of your purchase.

The register prints a record of the sale on the receipt. The star shows it was a cash sale. "A" is the clerk's initial. The amount is $1.00. It was the first sale on June 15, 1921. The register also prints an advertisement of the merchant's store on the front and back of the receipt.

Benefits the customer :

The plainly printed figures of the amount on the receipt show that she has not been overcharged. She likes to buy in a store of this kind.

Helps the clerk :

It proves that he registered the right amount. The added and printed records inside the register give the clerk credit for the sale.

Protects the Merchant :

He knows that to get the proper amount printed on the receipt, correct added and printed records must be made inside the register.

COCOANUT STOCKS IN SCANT SUPPLY

A New York despatch on the cocoanut market says: The market for Ceylon desiccated cocoanut is about the same as it was a week ago. Spot stocks of macaroon and medium shred are very small, with the prices firm, and a fairly good demand in evidence. Chip and thread are quiet and unchanged on spot. Futures for all cuts are unchanged to any extent for the week. Nearby afloat parcels are pretty well cleaned up and all indications seem to point to a continued spot scarcity in both macaroon and medium shred for some time to come.

DAYTON

Like the most delicate instruments of science--the Dayton Scale embodies the spring control principle

The speedometer, the micrometer and many of the most delicate and sensitive scientific instruments are operated upon the spring principle.

Upon this same established and scientifically approved principle of construction, Dayton Scales are equipped for the service they give in a million stores.

Dayton weights and Dayton price computations take nothing for granted. Dayton mechanism combines sturdiness and sensitiveness. While it responds with hairsbreadth precision at every operation, it is not approached in strength or durability, by any other scale on the market.

The superiority of the spring control principle in scale-building was demonstrated years ago by the unerring accuracy and lasting qualities of the Dayton. Patent office records tell the story of how envious competitors who sought for years to discredit the spring principle, at length "came to it," themselves—thus acknowledging publicly its superiority by striving to imitate it.

Public confidence in a tested and reliable product backs the judgment of satisfied users. The Dayton every day serves the customers of a million stores with Square Weights.

International SPEED ACCURACY ECONOMY Business Machines

THE BUSINESS THAT STAYS IS THE BUSINESS THAT PAYS

Your business will succeed only as it serves—and remember—The Business That Stays is the Business That Pays. The Dayton Scale is a builder of Business That Stays. It is medium of goodwill and confidence between the merchant and customer.

Here is a Brand New Ice Cream Cone

You See These Rims

These RIMS act as a sort of support to the cones, which keeps them loose from each other.

No matter how many there may be stacked togther, it is impossible for them to get jammed into each other, as it is the case with all other makes of cones in the market today.

These are also so constructed that they are much easier to pull out and handled, that there is no chipping at the edges and consequently no breakage.

Another Thing

When the Ice Cream melts at the bottom of the average cone there always remains a sort of leathery or peculiar taste to the cone.

It is not so with the

IMPERIAL FLOOR DRESSING

Imperial Floor Dressing comes in one and four-gallon lithographed sealed cans, and in half-barrels and barrels. Ask the Imperial Oil salesman for prices and a demonstration.

Dirt is bound to accumulate in busy stores. But it can be kept from settling on your stock and shelves in the form of dust if you use Imperial Floor Dressing.

Customers will be attracted by the absence of dust in your store, by the neat appearance of your merchandise, by your "spick and span" displays and bright show cases.

One application of Imperial Floor Dressing cleans and preserves floors and prevents dust from rising. One gallon will treat upwards of 700 square feet and does not need renewing for weeks.

Imperial Floor Dressing is non-evaporating and non-gumming. It catches and holds the dust on the floor where it can easily be swept up and disposed of. It is the most sanitary and satisfactory dressing you can buy—or sell—for floors, linoleum or oil cloth.

Its effective use in your own place of business creates a big market for floor dressing among your customers. Talk to the Imperial Oil salesman about it.

Make Time Work for You, Too!

Time's a grocer's right hand man. How he or his clerk's employ it often means success or failure. You generally can tell the grocer who knows this by his well dressed windows, counters and shelves.

He and his clerks take time to do these things. But they couldn't do it, if he was stocking anything but packages goods. He saves the time over old methods of handling bulks, tea and other things, and turns the hours thus saved to increasing his sale by display and other advertising, and sells his stock quickly.

Are you one of these Merchants?

Customers are quick to recognize the quality of the goods he sells by the trade mark on the packages. They know how good a tea he is selling in RED ROSE TEA. The sale was made before the customer came in.

If you're not one of these merchants, wouldn't you like to be? You can get a good start to-day with a case of RED ROSE TEA in packages. Why not mail us an order?

CANADIAN GROCER

VOL. XXXV. COLLINGWOOD, JULY 1, 1921 No. 26

"Business Better than 1919" says Retail Grocer

A certain class of trade, he states, is getting tired of the cash and carry idea, and is returning to the service stores—keeping stocks low, but volume of turnover is good.

(By Staff Correspondent)

Edmonton (Special.—"A crop failure around Edmonton has never been known," said a wholesale grocery buyer to Canadian Grocer representative. Mr. Morrison, of Morrison's grocery, 10440 White avenue, South Edmonton, bears this out.

"Business is better than 1919," says Mr. Morrison. Our stock is low now, but our volume of turnover is high although the amount of money represented is lower. We are doing good business."

Store is Well Equipped

This store has good equipment such as found in the leading grocery stores in every city. There are glass fronted bins in the hardwood counters, and this the full length of the store. On the other side of the store is a magnificent oak and mirror fixture that also extends the full depth of the store. This fixture was built originally for a candy store, and it permits of bright and artistic grocery display.

Forsaking Cash and Carry

Mr. Morrison thinks that a certain class of trade is beginning to forsake the cash and carry store. "Whether they are getting tired of toting their own groceries or whether their shopping bags are getting worn out, I don't know, but many are coming back for the service we give," he said.

A strong believer in modern labor and money saving appliances, this merchant uses one of the approved credit accounting systems. He has computing scales, meat slicer, etc.

A refrigerator showcase, with rack and tray for a lump of ice keeps the butter and milk in pink of condition. Canadian Grocer brings the trade news here each week.

A Meat, Slicer Increases His Sales Fifty Per Cent., Says This Grocer

R. R. Bothwell Allendale, Ont., finds a very gratifying gain in his turnover of bacon and ham, following the installation of a meat-slicer—is more economical and more profitable.

"THAT meat slicer has increased our sales fifty per cent." R. R. Bothwell Allendale, Ont. told a representative of Canadian Grocer recently. Mr. Bothwell believes that the only way to make a success of selling meats in the grcery business is to have a slicer. Of course he only sells bacon and cooked meats, but sales of them show such a gratifying increase over the period before the slicer was installed, that Mr. Bothwell declares that the gain in trade of this kind soon covered the cost of the slicer. "The service that a slicer renders possible," Mr. Bothwell stated, "makes it practically essential in a grocery store. People will go where they can have their cooked ham and bacon, sliced to their own particular liking. It is service of this kind that means so much in the way of developing sales".

Mr. Bothwell finds too that with a slicer, he is able to sell bacon and ham more profitably, as the slicer to a very large extent eliminates waste. Mr. Bothwell is able to slice the side of bacon or ham much more economically, and working small pieces in with the larger ones, there is little or no waste whatever.

TOLD HIM FIRST

Tom: "Rejected you, did she? My boy, you've got to be clever in the proposing game. You should have told her you were unworthy of her."

Ned (lugubriously): "I was going to, but she told it to me first.'—Boston Transcript.

The Trade Mark Represents a Guarantee

Stands for the sacredness and reputation of a name—is a guarantee to the merchant from the manufacturer—the law in respect to trade marks and how it protects them.

Who steals my purse steals trash.
'Tis something, nothing; 'twas mine, 'tis his,
And has been slave to thousands.
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

—Shakespeare.

WHETHER or not it was the inspiration of Shakespear's poetic conception of the sacredness and value of a name that prompted the first man to originate and, for his own protection register a trade mark represents, in many cases, the labor and the final achievement of years on which a manufacturer or wholesaler is willing to accept the verdict of a critical public. The trade mark stands sponsor for a name; a name is a reputation, and if the reputation be gone the name is no more a thing on which reliance and faith may be placed. The trade mark is the guarantee of the firm so using it that it is prepared to stand behind that name through good and ill report, that any damaging charge made against that name will be defended in the courts of the land to the fullest extent. To tamper with the name is to tamper with something sacred, with something that represents the entire future of a business; for this reason many interesting cases have developed in the courts with regard to trade marks.

The Merchant and the Trade Mark

The trade mark to the merchant is his guarantee to the consumer that the merchandise which he sells bears the stamp of quality and carries with it the assurance of the manufacturer that it is what it is represented to be. According to history, many of the old-time merchants were noted for sharp dealing. Some of them bartered, cheated, and even swindled customers by substituting something which they claimed was just as good, but which in many cases was a very inferior article, until by advertising, the merchant and the public became familiar with trade marks and to know the quality and quantity for which they stood. When, therefore, a manufacturer through advertising educated the public to the value of his product, he had built up a name for himself which he transcribed into a trade mark. Not only the holder of the trade mark, but the distributor of his goods reaps the benefit of the trade mark. Through systematic advertising, it becomes so well known that it is impossible to deceive the ultimate consumer if he or she is looking for the trade mark on the goods being purchased. The use and the advertising of the trade mark, therefore, becomes an asset in the hands of the merchant in the sale of his merchandise, not alone because of the guarantee accompanying it but also because it is now considered that trade marks are the standard for good quality.

Protection of Trade Marks

The law takes a very stern view of the encroachment on an established trade mark. In cases where a name has been associated with a well known product for a great number of years and the merchant and public have become accustomed by advertising to associate the name with a certain article, the court will protect the use of the name and restrain by injunction any infringement of that right.

The real question which the court to try in a case of alleged infringement of a trade mark whether what the defendant has done is calculated to deceive or whether there is so much imitation that goods bearing the one mark may readily be mistaken for goods bearing the other and whether a more careful inspection than an ordinary purchaser would be likely to give is necessary to distinguish the mark and appearance of the former goods from those of the latter.

When an action is commenced having for its object the restraint of an alleged unfair competition in trade carried on by means of an employment of another of a trade mark identical or nearly identical with the plaintiff's there must be established in order for the action to be successful the existence of the trade mark, the plaintiff's right to exclusive use therein and the fact of an imitation and the absence of license or acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff.

Where it can be shown that a dealer has imitated an article in his store and offers it for sale as the genuine article, even though he has only made a single sale, that is sufficient ground for an injunction and the dealer will be restrained from making any further sales.

If the defendant uses a distinct and obvious trade mark on his goods which he is alleged to be passing off as the plaintiff's and if he states plainly and in clear type that these goods are manufactured by himself, there is a very strong indication that the defendant has no intention of deceiving the public and it is doubtful in such a case if the court would restrain him.

When the defendant has not used the registered trade mark but something to be considered similar to it, the plaintiff has to satisfy the court that the use of this is calculated to deceive. But when the defendant has taken the material and essential part of the plaintiff's trade mark, the burden is upon the defendant then to disprove the probability of deception and not upon the plaintiff.

If the plaintiff cannot prove that the public are deceived or that there is a reasonable probability of deception, he has no right to interfere with the use of the name of others. All the court can do is to say that no trader can adopt a trade mark so resembling that of a rival that the ordinary purchasers purchasing with ordinary precaution will be misled.

Purchaser Must Not Be Misled

If a purchaser looking at an article offered to him would naturally be led from the mark impressed on it to suppose it to be the production of a rival manufacturer and would purchase it in that belief, then the court considers the use of such a mark to be fraudulent. In fact, it has been held that if the goods of a manufacturer have from the mark or device he has used become known in the market by a particular name, the adoption of a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market may be as much a violation of the right of that rival as an actual copy of the device itself.

FLOATING AQUARIA KEEP FISH ALIVE ON WAY TO MARKET

In Norway and Holland huge tank scows, which are in effect floating aquaria, have long been used to fetch fishes from the fishing grounds to market. Thus they reach the latter alive and in fine condition.

The idea has been newly adopted for use on this side of the ocean, and several such scows have been built for traffic between Canadian waters and the northern seacoast cities of the United States. They are built of wood, their hulls, which are long and narrow, having a number of compartments to hold the fish. The compartments are perforated with holes in order that the sea water may flow freely through them. Watertight bulkheads at bow and stern keep the craft afloat.

Some of the fishes inevitably die or sicken in the course of so long a voyage, and these are scooped out with long-handled nets and thrown away. The scows are sailing craft, but it is planned to equip them with gasoline engines for faster travel. One of them 24 days out from Quebec reached New York the other day wth a cargo of 1,000 tons of eels, caught in chicken-wire traps in the St. Lawrence River, which were delivered alive and wriggling at the Fulton fish market in the American city.

Some Trade Marks Recall Interesting Events

A study of a few manufacturers' trade marks reveals informative facts in connection with their origin.—Sometimes trade marks have been chosen at random, while others are definitely associated with the goods they represent, or in some instances with historic events.

THE value of a trade-mark has considerably increased in the past few years. Previous experience of the buyer and general advertising together, with the backing of the retail merchant has, to a great extent, been responsible for this fact. To-day a man goes to bed on a "trade marked" mattress. He wakes in the morning to the strident notes of "Big Ben" drops his feet into trade marked slippers and takes his bath with trade marked soap. He lathers his face with a "Shaving Stick" with a name on it, shaves himself with a "Gillett" or an "Auto Strap". He dons his clothing, much of which carries a trade mark sometimes even to the handkerchief he puts in his breast pocket. He makes his breakfast from branded foods that he has been taught to buy on the recommendation of his grocer and foods that he found by experience to be good and which he continues to purchase. He lights a trade marked cigar and rolls to the office in his "Cadillac" or "McLaughlin".

Origin is Interesting

Although practically every line of foodstuff, clothing, furniture, etc. carries a trade mark, they are taken more or less for granted and little is known of their origin, their ups and downs and of the careers of the men they make and sometimes break. The history of the origin of trade marks is interesting. Sometimes they are choosen at random; sometimes they are definitly associated with the goods they represent or composed of the letters of the firm manufacturing the article. These names have grown considerably in recent years and manufacturers have capitalized them at millions of dollars, because it is believed that the public knowledge of the same is a strong selling argument.

How "Kkovah" Was Formed

About thirty years ago Sutcliffe & Bingham, Limited of Manchester, England, commenced to manufacture Egg Custard, Egg Powder, Lemon Cheese, Lemon Curd, etc. In deciding on a trade mark for their products they selected the word "ova"—which means egg"—adding the two letters K in front and tacking H at the end thus building up the word "KKOVAH". This word KKOVAH has been used by the firm in connection with most of their products principally Kkovah Health salt, Kkovak Custard, Kkovah Lemonade Powders, etc.

The Why of "Cow" Brand

Cow Brand Soda was first manufactured in New York City in 1846 by John Dwight who, it is claimed was the first manufacturer of Bicarbonate of Soda in America. Up to the time of the centennial, which took place in Philadelphia in 1867, Mr. Dwight had not adopted a registered trade name, the soda being known simply as Dwight's Baking Soda.

On visiting the centennial his attention was called to a famous Jersey cow, two years old, which had taken the Gold Medal and prizes for milk and butter. Mr. Dwight was looking for a trade mark for his baking soda as a leavening power for bread, cakes, etc., the idea occured to him that it would be appropiate to use the picture of this cow, whose name was Lady Maud. He, therefore had an artist make an oil painting of Lady Maud and from that time on his soda has been known as "Cow Brand".

Cow Brand Soda was first sold in Canada by The Hudson Bay Company, who in the early days imported it from the United States. In the Spring of 1897 the Canadian business was started with headquarters in Montreal, where Church & Dwight Limted, the present proprietors have their factory.

Civil War and a Bottle of Mustard

Just as the late world war was responsible for the building up of a hugh volume of business on a certain brand of cigarettes that previously had a small consumption, so also was the American Civil War responsible for the birth of a trade mark for the little bag of tobacco that is familiar to all who prefer to "roll their own."

Shortly after Lee surrendered to Grant, negotiations were going on with Sherman near Durham Station, in North Carolina, where James R. Green made smoking tobacco in a small factory. Placed by the fortunes of war between two armies during the armistice, Green's tobacco rapidly made friends and when the armies disbanded, they carried away with them the memory of the enjoyable hours spent with the pipe, near Durham, and orders kept coming in such increasing volume that soon the little factory had to be enlarged. Seated one day in a restaurant, Green was explaining to a friend his sudden prosperity when the friend remarked that he would lose his trade if he did not brand his goods. The friend was asked to suggest a name and looking across the table he noticed a mustard jar upon the label of which appeared the picture of a bull. "The association of Bull and Durham seems rather a good idea", said the friend, and forthwith the trade mark "Bull Durham" came to life. It was registered on May 2, 1866

Cleanliness of the Dutch

Prehistoric periods found the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains racked by volcanic eruptions and as a result various sections of Western Nebraska are covered with a fine white volcanic dust. Geologists have found by examination of this strange dust that it must have been a boiling mass of whitish rock, so hot and active that rising in a form-like state, it then burst forth in the form of a fine white powder, which at this late date may still be found in thin ledges and pockets more or less mixed with sand and clay. The Cudahy Packing Co. discovered that this powder had cleansing power and secured control of a pure mine of this product. It lies in a pocket where it must have gathered in the ages past under exceptional conditions and is available in a great depth and in unknown quantities.

In adopting a distinguishing mark of trade for this product, the Cudahy Company took into consideration the fact that the Dutch people are known for their cleanliness. They therefore created a trade mark showing a Dutch matron with a stick in hand "chasing dirt". The stick, fuguratively speaking, stands for these arch enemies of dirt, the broomstick and scrubbing brush and thus "Old Dutch Cleanser" came to be a familiar name to merchant and customer.

One day a number of years ago a man was travelling on the Sixth Avenue Railroad in New York City and a sign across the aisle started him counting the number of different lines he manufactured. He checked them off on his fingers, and found that they totalled 59 kinds. His thoughts rambled on carelessly and such expessions as 59 kinds and 59 sorts wandered through his mind. Suddenly he found himself repeating "57 Varieties" over and over again to himself. He liked the sound of it and although he actually manufactured 59 varieties, it had a certain jingle that seemed to catch the ear. The guard called his station but the man did not hear. At last he found himself far beyond his destination and he was out on the platform in an instant. He wended his way to a lithographer, made certain arrangements and the trade soon began to hear about "Heinz 57 Varieties."

What "Egg-O" Signifies

The artist's idea when designing the Egg-O Baking Powder trade-mark was that beaten eggs being universally recognized as a valuable leavening agent in cake baking, a design showing the can of baking powder rising, as it were, from within an egg, encircled by wheat—symbolizing flour, would be a happy combination, impressing on the public mind Egg-O' function in relation to eggs and flour. The exclamaton "O" hyphenated to the egg is supposed to be one of joy and satisfaction that the housewite utters after she has tried the baking powder, while the widely advertised double action of "Egg-O" finds expression in the duplicate design centred in the larger on, meaning leavening power within leavening power.

The "Gold Dust" Twins

About forty years ago there appeared on the market a washing powder made from vegetable matter branded "Gold Dust." Upon the label of the packages was depicated two little negroes sitting in a tub. Three years later the little negroes were registered as a trade mark. About twenty years ago The N. K. Fairbank Co., Ltd., commenced to advertise "Gold Dust" showing the twins in action and soon their clever cleaning stunts were to be seen in the business papers, in the pages of newspapers, on billboards, and in street car advertising.

These are just a few of the stories of trade marks that are familiar to the grocery trade throughout Canada and that are known to the trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific including all the far North fur trading posts as well as Newfoundland.

A Clerk's Idea That Meant Increasd Sales

"The sweetness of low prices never compensates for the bitterness of poor quality," is the clerks' slogan in the J. McTaggart & Son store at Vancouver, B.C.—how a clerk worked out a display of biscuits that was a money getter.

"THE sweetness of low prices never compensates for the bitterness of poor quality."

This is a slogan that our clerks have come to thoroughly believe in," stated E. R. McTaggart of J. McTaggart & Son, Vancouver, B. C. to Canadian Grocer. "In selling goods over the counter or over the telephone, the quality phase of the subject is always put foremost. We believe that poor goods are never cheap and the buying public is finding the truth of that each day. We believe it good policy to encourage clerks to sell goods over and above what is requested by the customer and we have found that, the fact that we make a special drive on quality has been of material assistance to our sales people."

Put More Confidence in Clerks

That it is a good policy to place more confidence in the clerks, assisting them in every possible manner by making certain clerks responsible for certain departments, asking their opinion in regards to the buying or otherwise showing the clerks that they are something more than a mechanical part of the business machine, is evidenced by the experience of merchants who are getting good results and their turnover is greatly augmented.

This Idea Was a Money Maker

"The most outstanding and lucrative idea conceived by one of our staff and the best from many angles that I have seen, resulted in a tremendous increase in sales on biscuits", continued Mr. McTaggart. "Our Mr. Gordon suggested that if biscuits were properly displayed that is, kept clean and free from dust it might be profitable to boost them, This entire department was therefore given over to Mr. Gordon to handle in his own way and according to his own judgement. He buys the biscuits and oversees the selling. Hs idea is to devote one window to featuring biscuits. He has them kept under glass, free from flies and dust and they always look attractive. I can say without hesitation that since Mr. Gordon has taken complete charge of the biscuit department that sales have practically quadrupled. When people buy things to eat they want them clean . Mr. Gordon features that point, sometimes the window is full of biscuits with a card on which is printed, nothing but the one word "Cleanliness". The biscuits sell themselves displayed in this manner.

Train Clerks as to Costs

One merchant in western Ontario says it is as important to train clerks in the cost of goods as it is in making them thoroughly acquainted wth the selling price. Their system of keeping a record of the costs is somewhat unique, but nevertheless accurate. They have a thumb indexed book in which every purchased is entered. For instance under the letter "S" is entered purchases of sugar, showing the date bought, quantity, from whom purchased and the price. Under the letter "D" all varieties of dried fruits; under "C" canned goods, etc. These entries are made by the bookkeeper at the same time invoices are entered in the purchasing ledger, so that the book is kept up to date every day.

This book is open to all clerks and they are encouraged to use it freely and become familar with the cost of the goods they are selling. This merchant claims that by so doing, the clerks are encouraged to stay with the business, take more interest and are less inclined to waste. But the biggest point, this merchants claims is that the knowing the cost price, is more inclined to sell the article that shows the greatest profit.

B. C. FRUIT WILL SUPPLY WESTERN CANADA

Winnipeg, June.—According to advices received in Winnipeg from the British Columbia Traffic and Credit association there will be a plentiful supply of B.C. fruit this year for the needs of Western Canada at reasonable prices.

"Indications are that the crop will be fairly heavy," the report says. "It will probably equal the crop of 1911, which was the largest crop up to that time. There was a heavy bloom this spring, but the June drop now in progress is greater than anticipated. Some orchards only have a moderate crop left."

"New Goods Column"

Berger's Rice Starch, a culinary line that has been off this market for nearly seven years on account of the war and conditions in France, is once more listed among the culinary starches for sale on this market. It is packed in cases of 28 one pound packages or 56 half pound packages. This is one of the many French lines that have barred from this market on account of trade conditions in Europe during the war and the period of re-establishment.

Creating Friendly Rivalry Among the Clerks

The plan as adopted by one grocery firm succeeds in increasing sales—a statement is furnished by each clerk showing sales on corresponding days in the previous year, and an effort is then made to show an advance—must be reliable clerks

A friendly competition among clerks in a grocery store or in fact any retail establishment is good business, and tends to increase sales in a way that otherwise might not get the same results. The method employed by a large grocery in an Ontario town reveals an interesting scheme in the way of promoting friendly rivalry among the staff.

Each Clerk Has Check Sheet

This employer gives a check sheet to each clerk every Monday morning, that gives an account for each day for the following week, of the amount of sales made on the corresponding days of the previous year. In some instances the business done in the preceding twelvemonth, had been done by another clerk who had left the firm, and of course this fact was an incentive for a new employee to try and beat out the record of his predecessor. A clerk too always tries to beat his own record of a year ago.

This procedure day after day, found the staff at the end of each day comparing notes with each other, thus creating a friendly competition all the time, and giving the employees an interest in the business that made them feel they were something more than just clerks. Referring particularly to these check sheets, it might be stated that they do not show the total amount of business done in the whole store, for that day, but the actual sales made by each clerk or his predecessor. At the end of the week the manager reported how far the business for the six days, was ahead of the corresponding period in the year before.

Must Be Reliable

Such was the training and experience of Mr. Clemence of Jones & Clemence, Stayner, Ont. Mr. Clemence served as a clerk for several years before going into business for himself, and the system of dealing with clerks in the store in which he was employed, is that outlined at the beginning of this article. In Mr. Clemence's opinion a clerk, with whom the confidences of the firm, in regard to profits and such like, are shared, must be thoroughly reliable. In most instances he thinks it is best for the merchants to take his clerks into his confidence, but again an unreliable clerk might do a lot of harm by discussing outside the store the matter of profits on various articles. Jones & Clemence tell their clerks everything there is to know about goods, and seek their assistance in the purchasing. A clerk should familiarize himself or herself as the case might be with a thorough knowledge of the stock. By so doing they can render valuable aid in buying. Mr. Clemence states that he and his partner are away from the store considerably, and on this account, it is a fine thing to have clerks so reliable and so trained that they can take full charge.

A Profitable Combination

Jones & Clemence conduct a bakery too in connection with their grocery store, and Mr. Jones devotes most of his time to this work. Mr. Clemence told a representative of Canadian Grocer that a bakery in connection with a grocery in a small town, was a profitable combination. Getting the people buying bread, they are very often likely to buy other goods. Having a bakery meant selling more bread, and also selling it at a profit.

Serving Summer Residents

Catering to a colony of summer residents along Wasaga Beach, and in the vicinity of Stayner and Collingwood, is a feature of the grocery trade of Jones & Clemence. Mr. Clemence told the Canadian Grocer representative that his firm made a special effort to give these summer customers the best of service. Giving first-class service has been the principal factor in stimulating trade of this kind, and the same people come year after year. Pleasing them meant of course continued patronage. At the beginning of the season these cottagers write to Jones & Clemence, giving the inital order and when they arrive at their cottages the groceries ordered are there, thus saving them a good deal of trouble and bother, at the time when they are busy moving and settling.

How to Store Dried Fruits in Summer

(By S. G. Bendon, Montreal)

Now that the hot weather is upon us there are many people who have surplus stocks of dried fruits, and have no cold storage facilities and are wondering which is the best method of packing them during the summer months.

Raisins need more care than other dried fruits on account of the sugar content of this fruit which is 76 per cent. sugar in Californias and about 82 per cent. in Spanish raisins. The best method of keeping them is in a cool dry cellar with the windows of the cellar open and heavily screened so that the cool air is continually blowing through into the cellar.

Pack Them From Ground Up

It is a fatal mistake to place dried fruits in an upstairs store room, as the heat ascends. Do not pack dried fruits one on top of another, but pack them from the ground as follows:—Between each case allow a space about three or four inches; pack the next pile over this air space in pyramid style. In this way the air circulation comes right through the boxes and keeps the fruits in a moist condition and will not dry up as they would if packed one case on top of another. This little idea may mean the saving of thousands of dollars to those who are carrying surplus stocks of dried fruits through the Summer months.

The Care of Prunes

Prunes do not need exactly the same care as raisins, due to the fact that they do not contain the same amount of sugar content, but prevention is better than cure. They too should be kept in the same way. This method also applies to peaches and apricots and other dried fruits. It is well to see that the windows in the cellar are open and a little cost of heavy wire screen would more than stand the cost of the loss that you would sustain if packed one upon another in an upper room.

If the cellar is very damp it would not be advisable to put them there, but put them in your coolest place in the store or warehouse, for if a cellar is damp, it will cause the fruit to go mouldy. Excessive dampness like excessive heat is very bad for fruits.

Will Absorb Moisture

You no doubt are aware that the water is taken away from the fruits while drying and it is natural that the fruit will absorb moisture, but if too much moisture is absorbed this has a tendency to cause a greenish mould. In raisins this is formed by heavy whitish sugar appearance, this being the sugar in the raisins that has risen through the skin. This does not show on seedless raisins but through improper storing the seedless raisins will become wormy in packages. Many of you no doubt have noticed this. Sometimes worms appear in seeded raisins, too, but this does not take effect unless the raisins are one year old.

If there is any information that you care to ask further, I will be very pleased to answer same through the medium of the Canadian Grocer.

Influence of Pleasant Surroundings and the Result

A. J. Nicholas, Port Stanley, Ont., says that it is hard to overestimate the importance of pleasing surroundings, and the effect they have on sales—a well equipped store sells goods.

A well equipped store will sell goods all the time according to the opinion of A. J. Nicholas at Port Stanley, Ont. The Nicholas store caters to a summer population largerly, and trade here in the summer months is on a very large scale. The store is all done in white, and immediately on entering the same, one is impressed with the cleanliness and systematic arrangement of the place. The floors of this store are oiled and swept four times each day, and the stock always looks fresh. Equipment that tends to facilitate service is installed. Display front counters, computing scales, display cases, and a refrigerator counter for the meats department, constitute the fixtures in this store.

Influence of Surroundings

"It is hard to overestimate the importance of pleasing surroundings and the influence that they have on sales," remarked Mr. Nicholas to Canadian Grocer. With the exception of the modern bin counter the fixtures are all a spotless white, the best possible color for summer, while mirrors set at intervals along the wall add a still further touch of brightness to the store. Another item that might well be considered is the orderliness of the goods displayed. That is something that every grocer can achieve and it is a big selling item.

Selling Cooked Meats

In the summer season this store makes a feature of its cooked meat trade. That this trade may be kept constantly before the customers, a glass-faced refrigerator is one of the central arrangements of the store. It is kept scrupulously clean and attractively arranged, and the handsome meat cutting machine is another element in building this trade. A candy case is also an important element, as it should be to a summer trade. Fruit is handled in individual baskets.

Mr. Nicholas is this year making the experiment of selling bananas by the pound. It is his first attempt at disposing of bananas in this way, and he believes that it is going to work satisfactorily. At first the people did not take kindly to the idea, but when told that it really was the most economic method and that some people were not getting all the big ones and other all the small ones, they are gradually becoming convinced that selling by the pound is the best method.

Sells For Cash Only

A few years ago this firm managed a cash system in their store, and it has worked out splendidly. It worked very satisfactorily with the town trade right from the first, but it did not take so well with the summer vacationists. But Mr. Nicholas was quite confident that for them the system was best, and they had confidence enough to carry it through for their whole trade. "To do otherwise," said Mr. Nicholas, "would have been to show favors to these casual customers that we would not show to our regular trade, and that would have certainly told against us in the end." Despite the rather unusual nature of the innovation as applied to the summer trade, the scheme proved an unqualified successs. Some customers were lost. There are always customers who will not pay cash, and they are often very good customers. But the partners stuck by their guns and would not vary their policy of requiring the same conditions of everyone. They figured up this lost business and the profit that would have accrued from it and compared it with the amount written off at the close of the previous year for bad debts. This comparison showed that the item of bad debts amounted to more than the item of lost profit, so that despite the fact that the lost customers were both profitable and reliable, there seemed to be no doubt but the system has justified itself.

Illustrating part of a circular recently sent out by E. H. Crimp, Saskatoon, Sask. And upon which Mr. Crimp says "it caused considerable comment and put customers in a better buying mood."

That many retail merchants are getting gratifying results, in increased sales, by using the suggestion in May 20 issue of Canadian Grocer to convince customers of the price declines which appeared, is evidenced by the letters recently received. Mr. Crimp's letter to Canadian Grocer speaks for itself:

"I do considerable advertising by mail in my immediate neighborhood. Following the suggestion in Canadian Grocer of May 20 under the heading "Convincing Customers of Price Declines" I sent out the enclosed circular, which needless to say caused considerable comment and put customers in a better buying mood.

I thank you for the many helpful suggestions I have received in the past from your paper. It has taught me many things about how to run a Grocery business and trust you will carry on the good work."

Appreciates Policy of Wholesalers

Grocers' section of the Saskatchewan R. M. A. express admiration of the way Saskatchewan wholesalers refuse to sell boarding houses, institutions, and restaurants.

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer.

Saskatoon, June 20.—Following the general session of the whole of the Sask. Retail Merchants' Association, the grocers were called together for a trade section meeting on Wednesday, June 15. and a busy meeting it was right from the start. Several wholesalers were present, as all wholesalers had been especialy invited. The packers, though, who had received the same request, were not present at all, which fact was commented upon.

Praise For Sask. Wholesaler

In Regina a joint meeting of wholesalers and retailers was held a few months ago, and reached an agreement on many points that had been contentious. The retailers, one and all expressed their admiration and respect tor the ethical manner in which the Saskatchewan wholesaler has played the game. The packers are blamed most bitterly for many reported breaches of the ethics of good business in Saskatchewan as defined by the joint committees of the retailers and the wholesalers. The wholesalers are not selling to any consumers except their own married employees. They are not selling to boarding houses. At this point one merchant complained bitterly that one of the packers calls several times a week to solicit business from a boarding house in his town, which boards six persons.

Do Not Sell Institutions

The wholesalers in Saskatchewan do not sell institutions and clubs. The retailers and wholesalers together prepared a list of those contractors entitled to buy at wholesale, and this is working out entirely satisfactorily. Restaurants are being urged by packers, it is claimed, to rig up a shelf, put in a few groceries and call themselves retailers. The wholesalers refuse to be parties to any such deception. It was asked that retailers other than grocers be not permitted to buy provisions for their own use from wholesale grocers.

Wholesalers must not sell to those merely operating warehouses, and peddling to houses.

It was stated by the wholesalers that the large restaurants, who were refusing goods at wholesale in Saskatchewan, sent to Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver and even Chicago and buy what they want.

Mr. McMicken, the Provincial President, who occupied the chair, said that the provincial boards of the R.M.A. will have to co-operate and see that their own local jobbers are not doing anything unethical and detrimental to the interest of the retailers as a whole.

Exception To One Clause

Calgary wholesalers, represented by Mr. Miller, of Campbell, Wilson, Miller, took exception to one clause, considering that the retailers were attempting to stop them supplying provincial jails, asylums, etc. The merchants stated that their resolution did not state so—but only applied to small municipal institutions and not Dominion departments and institutions. The incoming executive was appointed a committee to act with the wholesalers towards still better mutual understanding and confidence. The packers will be dropped from the members' buying list unless they show a disposition to discuss fair dealing with the retailers.

Saskatchewan Egg Act

Probably the longest and most acrimonious debate waged over the Saskatchewan Act of inspection of eggs.

The merchants from all parts of the province are sending eggs to the various city wholesalers and as the market declines, the percentages of rots and cracks deducted from their returns are increasing. All the merchants feel that they are being cheated. They have decided to cooperate with the Departmental offices in making test inspection.

The new officers of the grocers' section are: Chairman—T. M. McEwen, Kindersley; 1st vice chairman—E. H. Crimp, Saskatoon; 2nd vice-chairman—C. Bruser, Humbolt; Secty.-Treas.—R. J. Ries, St. Gregor.

THE GOOD WILL OF YOUR CLERK

(Reprint from Armour & Co.' Better Business Bulletin)

Clerks have one sure way of showing the goodwill they bear towards you and your store—the way they deal with the customer.

Stand off at the end of the counter some day and watch one of your men sell. You can tell, instantly, if he is interested in his work, interested in the customer's needs—and posted on the goods he's tryng to sell.

You can tell by his very attitude whether he thinks he is working for a good man, who runs a good store under the right sort of fair-dealing policy. You can tell by the way he talks the goods whether he believes in their value.

Is he enthusiastic, polite, attentive?

Does he sell just as carefully as it it were his store?

It won't take you long to tell whether that clerk really does like his job.

If you have educated him up to your store politics, if you have enthused him over the service and values you have to offer, he will show it in a hundred little ways. Goodwill by the clerk is easily spotted.

But if you have neglected his store education—if you have tailed to sell him on the idea that yours is not a one-man business—if you have failed to prove to him that you appreciate intelligence, you can quickly tell this in his listless work.

It's a store crime for any man to try and run along in a 50 per cent. way. The hundred percenters in the grocery business have instilled enthusiasm in their men—backed it by personal interest in each clerk, and have watched sales grow as a result.

You've always got to allow for "the human equation"—and mistakes will be made in the best of store families. So watch your clerks, correct their errors in the right way, elevate their ideas of right selling and service—and you'll arrive at a stage of store efficiency you might not have thought possible.

The goodwill of the clerk is as important as the goodwill of the customer. One builds the other.

When the "boss" and his clerks team-work together, enthusiastically and intelligently, customers are rarely slighted.

And that in turn means you can feel absolutely sure of Mrs. Best Customer getting just as good treatment trom each one of your clerks as she would of you waited upon her yourself.

THE QUESTION OF TURNOVER

THE question of turnover is ever an important one to the average merchant, and never was it more important than in these last few months. The retailer who is turning his stock over as quickly as possible, and not buying in too great quantities, is weathering the period of declining markets, with the least of worries. At this time, it is not only necessary to watch this matter of turnover, but the merchant, who is aiming to be successful must pay a good deal of attention to it, at all times. One retailer in discussing turnover with a representative of Canadian Grocer, stated that he turned over his stock over eighteen times a year. His policy, he said, was to purchase goods only in such quantities so that he could get the rapid turnover, and not have very much tied up in any one line. For instance if a salesman came in to sell him something that he knew was comparatively a slow mover, telling him that some merchant up the street had purchased twenty-five cases of the same, he would tell the salesman to put him down for only one case. "I can always repeat the order", he remarked, "and my money is not tied up in one or two lines. I endeavor to gauge the size of the order, from the rapidity with which each line turns. An article like sugar I would naturally buy in greater quantities, than a slow moving line. But on the whole I endeavor to turn my goods over one and a half times each month, and I feel that this is one of the best habits that a store can get into."

It is up to every grocer, and retail merchants generally to watch his stock, with the idea in mind of selling it in the shortest possible time. It is better to buy often, than to have stock lying on one's shelves unsold. It is never well to have stock so low, that sales might be lost as a result, but careful watching will see to it that this does not occur.

BUSINESS PAPERS HIGHLY VALUED

THE British letter rate to Canada has been doubled, being now 4c. instead of 2c. There was a proposal to increase the postal rates on business and trade and technical newspapers sent to Canada but the Government after looking into the matter not to do so and when an announcement to that effect was made in the British House of Commons on June 9th it was, according to cables appearing in Canadian newspapers, greeted with tremendous applause. The Postmaster-General pointed out that even the leading daily newspapers in Great Britain opposed any increase of rates on technical and trade newspapers because it would hamper British spirit and enterprise overseas as compared with the United States and Germany and would retard the recovery of British export trade.

Sir Geo. Foster said that the British Trade Commission, of which he was a member, had found chiefly on the evidence submitted to them in Australia, that the reason German manufacturers had secured such a powerful and increasing hold on the Australian market was their persistency in salesmanship. Sir George did not get the whole story or, if he did, he failed to apply it. That salesmanship was spoken and written. The way for German salesmen was prepared to advance. Their advertising in the business newspapers—printed in English sometimes—preceded their salesmen for two or three years and it came to the desks of their customers weekly or monthly to supplement the calls of their salesmen—to work for them while their salesmen were not there.

A SIGNIFICANT MOVE

THE Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association have resolved to eliminate as much as possible the price cutting programme that has held away in the grocery business for at least the last six months. This has not only affected sugar, soap and canned goods, but has spread into many other lines to such an extent, that the retailer has been at sea to know how the actual market price stood. In many cases he has been led astray by fancying that prices on certain lines were dropping faster than was really the case. As a result confidence in the market was destroyed. The retailer can do much to aid in stablishing the markets and restoring the confidence of the trade. Price cutting in any market, retail or wholesale is disastrous. The merchant must have his fair profit in order to do business and competition, particularly in the grocery business, cannot afford to be on the basis of prices but rather quality and service in addition to replacement value. Everyone in the grocery business must realize this if they would see more stable conditions. A little study of conditions from time to time will be time well spent. If the wholesaler cuts prices, the retailer will be forced to do so too and so general does the practice become in a little time that nobody gains anything and everybody loses something. The confidence of the public is largely lost too.

EDITORIALS IN BRIEF

Most of the merchants who complain about hard times are men who could not make a success of their stores in the best times the country ever saw.

* * *

Success with a store is not a matter of some one or a few great stunts. It is a matter of every day plugging to make your store popular.

* * *

It is not all of merchandising success to get rid of a lot of goods or to fill the store with customers. Important as these thngs are, the net profit is the real indication of success.

Why His Gross Profit Was Not $18,000

A merchant who had done a business of $60,000 in the year was disappointed when he found that his mark-up of thirty per cent. did not yield the net profit that he had anticipated—another discussion on the computing of margins.

UNCLE SAM AS DELIVERY BOY

A few weeks ago I related how a merchant had done $60,000 business on a "mark-up" of 30 per cent only to find the net he expected at the year end was not there; and how analysis would show readily enough that a mark-up of 30 per cent was vastly different from 30 per cent on sales. Now I have an inquiry as follows:

"Would you be kind enough to show me why, taking the figures you quote, this merchant's gross profit would not be $18,000? At the bottom of it all what difference does it make which way you figure as long as you come out with the same amount? If I buy an article for $1.00 and sell it for $1.25 I am making 25 per cent on my cost and 20 per cent on seeling price and either way I figuer I have the same amount of money in hand at the end of the transaction."

All o fwhich is indubitably true. But our care must be to get "facts before acts." We must ascertain first what are the actual conditions in business now, then seek to correct evils therein by the shortest, most logical methods. We find, then, as a primary condition, that every merchant who knows his expense, or who even suspects what they are, thinks of them in relation not to his costs but to his sales. In fact, he cannot help it; and if you would know why, try to figure out your expenses in relation to the cost of your various articles and you will see what an impracticably interminable job it is, how liable to errors, how almost impossible to check out accurately.

Now, therefore, this friend of mine who may sell an article for $1.25 for which he paid $1.00 will have an expense of, say. 20 per cent. Let him tell what his expense is and then ask him what it is figured on. He may stutter about a while, but in the end you will find it is figured not on the dollar paid but on the $1.25 for which the goods are sold. All right; 20 per cent on $1.25 is 25 cents, so he has nothing left by way of net profit on that transaction, though he expected to have 5 cents left! That is what happened to the man who worked on the "mark-up" theory.

Why He Did Not Have $18,000

To see why this man did not have $18,000 margin—which I prefer to "gross profit" as much more accurate—test it this way: To $10.00 add 30 per cent and you will have $13.00. The spread here is thus found to be $3.00. The merchant's expenses were 15 per cent, on sales, so we must find what margin he has on sales to get both figures on the same basis. Therefore we must take the $3.00 margin and divide it by $13.00 to get its porportion to the $13.00 sales. Thus:

   ---
13 ) 30
     26
   ---
     40
     39
   ---

So we find that 30 per cent on cost is 23 per cent plus on sales, and 23 per cent on $60,000 is $13,800, not $18,000. That is why this man did not have $18,000—and that he did not have it was one of the greatest surprises of his young life!

It is nearly twenty years since I began to wirte about this matter of margin computation. To figure on sales was then a novelty to most retailers on this scale, although it was an old story in Great Britain, the country of ancient business science. To-day everybody who develops along the way of business accountancy figures this way and no other. It is the way of all successful men, big and little. And is it wise to follow the example of successful men rather than that of poor, stuttering weak sisters who never are much, if any more than solvent? It is the way adopted and endorsed, and sonsistently followed out by government. So to-day it should seem to be so as well established as the truism—also exceedingly difficult to explain, by the way—that two plus two makes four; and I am for passing up further discussion on it. I'd like to assume that the man who does not know this rudiment should go to the primary grades and not take up time of those who know it so well that they resent having their reading cluttered up with t—those who want something informative, forward looking, in what they read.

Don't you think it's about tme for the class graduate above the primary?

Bu Who Will Abolish "Around & About"

But there remains another serious reason why this man did not have the $18,000 he looked for. That is, he figured his mark-up "around" 30 per cent. This means that he had in his mind 30 per cent, probably, but if the figure resulting happened to be an odd on, he he just made it "even money," and never stopped to figure what that "evening-up" process really meant to him.

Let us glance at it this way: Suppose you buy something at $1.75 the dozen and aim to make 30 per cent on it. The rule for computing margin to arrive at the correct sale figure to include any desired margin is Take the margin you wish to make from 100 and divide the cost by the remainder. Now, as we desire to make 30 per cent, we take that from 100, leaving 70, and we proceed to divide $1.75 by 70. Then we know that 7 is as good as 70 for this purpose—simpler, in fact—so we use 7, thus:

  ---
7 ) 175
    14
  ---
    35
    35
  ---

Seven goes into 17 twice and leaves 3 over. We bing down the5 and have 35, into which 7 goes 5 times. Then we add the 0 to bring the figure up to the $2.50 that we can see at a glance will result.

Now, we cannot sell anything for $2.50 the dozen that we sell by the can because we cannot divide $2.50 by 12. So we have the easy-going guesser in business, who says he oesn't like to "split nickles", and he sells for 20 cents the can. Thus he gets $2.40 instead of the $2.50 he started out to get, and that figures just a fraction over 27 per cent—a difference of nearly 3 per cent in a business wherein the net profit has averaged close to 3 per cent for many years! Or you may say that 3 pr cent on $60,000 turnover, is $1800 a year. It is such "little matters" that make up the difference between success and failure—between thinking you having something and actually having it.

You may have a prudent neighbor who, when differences arise, takes the benefit of the doubt to himself. This man disregards the "split nickle" difficulty and boldly prices his article at 21 cents the can. He thus gets not only $2.50 but $2.52; and that seeming trifle yields him 30.55 per cent plus, or more than ½ per cent extra. And one half per cent on $60,000 is $300. Little things? O, yes: they count up!

Habit of Getting the Minute Fractions

Follow this further: Sales in the grocery store average not far from 33 1-3 cents each. Thus it takes three distinct transaction to get one dollar

Certain Fruits May Be Displayed On The Sidewalk

Kitchener, June 7, 1921

Editor, Canadian Grocer,

Will you kindly give us your opinion on the following. Our local Board of Health passed an order that Kitchener grocers cannot display or show any oranges, bananas, peaches, lettuce, potatoes, onions or fruits or vegetables of any kind outside of our place of business. We have some under glass, with the exception of potatoes, onions or other coarse vegetables. This order will hinder the sale of these goods, as fruits have to be shown to be sold, especially when peaches, cherries, plums and other fruits arrive. Have they the power according to law to pass and impose this order?

Will you kindly give us this information as soon as possible? We did not receive Canadian Grocer last week. No doubt the strike in your city caused the delay. We hope for a speedy settlement. We have received this paper for twenty years, and the subscription of the same was the best investement we ever made. Thanking you,

Yours truly,
SCHELL BROS.

June 20, 1921

Messrs. Schell Bros.,
Kitchener, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—

According to regulations of the Ontario Board of Health, vegetables and fruits that require peeling or cooking before consuming such as roots, bananas, oranges, peaches, etc., can be displayed for sale in front of merchants' places of business providing they do not occupy more than eighteen inches of space on the sidewalk. Other vegetables and fruits, such as berries, lettuce, etc., that are eaten in the raw state without peeling and therefore subject to contamination of the street that would render them injurious to health can be displayed in front of a merchant's place of business providing they are covered with glass and do not occupy more than eighteen inches of space on the sidewalk.

As far as we can find out, municipal councils have no power to change this regulation as it comes from the Provincial Board and there is no regulation to prohibit merchants from displaying their merchandise in front of their place of business providing the above regulations are carried out.

It appears to us that if your city council has made a by-law prohibiting you from displaying merchandise on the street that the wisest course to pursue would be for a deputation of grocers to wait upon the council, stating that you are abiding with the regulations of the Ontario Board of Health and point out that sales are greatly reduced when goods cannot be displayed at the front.

Trusting this information is what you require and always glad to be of service to you, we remain,

Yours very truly,
CANADIAN GROCER,
Editor.

Grocers Should Have Proper Training

Editor Canadian Grocer,

Sir:—Much has been written of late as to the fitness of tradesmen for the calling of which they advertise they are experts and know absolutely nothing of the trade. Take the doctor or chemist. We all know how careful they must be to pass examinations which take long to prepare for, and our very existence at times depends on their skill and judgment. Then the various trades, electricians, engineers, shoemakers, tailors and many others all have to undergo a long course of training which requires study and skill, and why should not the same conditions apply to the man who puts a sign on his window and calls himself a grocer?

Selection of a Grocer

To my mind we cannot be too careful in the selection of our "grocer" and to find out the man who knows all about the articles he is selling. What can be more certain and satisfying to the housewife than to be able to confide in the provider of her daily food and to feel sure that with dealing with such an one she is getting only the best that can be bought, by someone who thoroughly understands what he is buying.

Usually we find men (who could never concentrate on anything in the way of learning a trade) taking a small store in a side street, with a box of oranges and lemons, onions, celery and potatoes, a soda fountain, coal oil, charcaol and mineral waters, fresh Western beef and tobacco and styles himself a grocer. Further, why should he be allowed to use this name, for he knows no more about the articles he is selling than the articles know him. There is no greater danger than dealing with various sorts of canned fruits, fish, vegetables and meats when nothing is known about their condition when first put into stock, but which becomes unfit for consumption when improperly cared for.

Better Name "Jumble Dealers"

The proper designation for all such traders in my mind would be "jumble dealers" and the word "grocer" ought not to be allowed over the store of any man who has not a proper training in the handling of the food which is to be distributed to the public.

I have had a long experience as a grocer, having served an apprenticeship without any wages until I reached the age of nineteen years, and I feel proud of the knowledge I possess of the various grocery lines, their place of origin, their growth and production and the manufacture of other lines. As an employer of a large grocery staff I regret the lack of knowledge I have found on the part of many so-called grocery clerks, many of who could never be anything but drudges in the business since they take no real interest in it as a trade.

Grocers ought to combine to show their strength and make sure that only men who have thoroughly learned the business be allowed to designate themselves as grocers.

Merchants In Amherst, N. S., Form An Association

Amherst, N. S., June 13.—At a meeting of the retail merchants the Wednesday afternoon half holiday for the months of June, July, August and September was adopted by a large majority. Most of the stores commenced the practice, but a number remained open owing to the closing not having been sufficiently advertised previous to this time.

The merchants also petitioned that during Jan., Feb. and March, the stores close at 5.30 p.m. instead of 8.30 p.m. on Tuesday.

That Christmas evening shopping begin not more than ten business days before Christmas, and that the regular hours for closing again come into effect on the first business day atfer Christmas.

That the stores remain closed on the following holidays, New Years, Good Friday, Victoria Day (May 24), Dominion Day (July 1st), Labor Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas ; and that the privilege is given the merchants to keep their places a business open until 10 p.m. the night before any of the above holidays. Christmas Eve as desired.

That during the months of June, July, August and September, the stores be closed Wednesday at 12 o'clock noon, and remain so during the day.

That during the half-holidays in June, July, August and September the Restaurants and Refreshment Stores be not allowed to sell groceries.

Retail Merchants Association

Another important decision arrived at was, the formation of a local branch of the Retail Merchants Associated, to be affiliated with the Dominion Retail Merchants Association. The officers of the local branch were appointed as follows:

President—Randolph Adams.

Vice-Pres.—C. L. Martin.

Secretary—A. L. Wright.

Treasurer—C. B. Chapman.

Petitions are being circulated and it is expected that the association will have a large local membership.

Saskatoon Can Boast of No "Groceterias" Within Its Borders

Eighty-five grocers give ample service to this city of the West, and the people are used to such good service that they do not look with favor on any new idea.

Saskatoon, June 20.—There is at least one city in Canada that does not know the word "Groceteria." That city is Saskatoon. Eighty-five grocers give ample service to this thriving northern city and competition keeps them all on their tip toes—but—not as in other cities—where besides halt the merchants on their toes—the other half are on their uppers.

People Want the Service

Probably G. Reid, grocery manager of the big department store, J. F. Cairns, Ltd., said it when he remarked, "The people of Saskatoon have been so used to the service that the grocers here give—and the prices have at all times been fair—that they do not look with favor on any idea of less service for a small saving. Quite 50 per cent. of our customers run monthly accounts with us. Their business is perfectly satisfactory to us,—and our goods and service seem to meet with their approval. We deliver three times a day—and I may say, that even in this much advertised land of snow, we never take our auto trucks off the road all the year round."

Accepted the Mark-Down

As soon as a definite price decline came into evidence, this concern took their mark-down and kept business rolling. Mr. Reid declares it is the only policy. Now stocks are low, but a splendid variety still assures every customer that she will get at Cairns' what she prefers. It is of interest to grocers to note this fact—the grocery section of this store has to bar the major portion of the delivery expense for the whole store. This would seem to preclude the possibility of using the grocery department as a "come-on" for the other departments; a practice which is much suspected when the departmental store operates a grocery department. Extra space is accorded the grocery department in the Tuesday newspaper space. This extra grocery effort on Tuesday successfully removed some of the average Saturday peak load. Any offers made for Tuesday only to city folks, are extended a week for the benefit of country mail order buyers.

Will Welcome Sale By Weight

In Saskatoon potatoes are sold by the bushel, yet and eggs by the dozen although many merchants will welcome the general adoption of the sale by weight. Bananas are sold by weight, with much advantage all round.

The Department's Location

While the grocery department of the Cairns' Departmental Store is in the basement, that of the MacMillan Departmental store, also in Saskatoon, is located on the third floor. This undoubtedly draws all grocery buyers through the store, but makes a heavy tax at times on elevator service. In Woodward's, Vancouver, when the roceteria system is in use, the department is in the basement, and in this case, elevator service, while possible, is not given.

CANNING INSPECTOR IN WESTERN CANADA

C. S. McGillivray, Chief Canning Inspector, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, left last week for a trip through Western Canada to the coast. Mr. McGillivray hopes to meet the wholesale grocery trade throughout the west in connection with any troubles any of them have encountered in regard to the grading of canned vegetables, the matter of correct labels, etc., etc. Wholesale grocers who are in doubt about the various regulations in regard to canned vegetables and fruits should get in touch with him. On his way west he will be in Saskatoon, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria, and he will come back by way of Nelson, Cranbrook, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Moose Jaw, Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg.

Mr. McGillivray was among those who addressed the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Convention in Quebec City last week.

PAPER BOX MAKERS HOLD CONVENTION IN HAMILTON

Hamilton, June.—The sixth annual convention of the Canadian Paper Box Manufacturers' Association, was held in the Royal Connaught Hotel on June 23 and June 24. C. M. Moisan of the Standard Paper Box Co. of Montreal was elected president; C. W. Brown, St. John, N.B., vice-president; S. J. Frame, Toronto, secretary-treasurer; and J. B. Lawrason, Toronto, B. Sproule, Toronto, and George Hancock, of Galt, the board of directors. The next convention will be held in Montreal.

What the Proofreader Did

"Where's that infernal proofreader?" shouted an irate man with blood in each eye.

"He certainly would be right hard to find now," said the editor uneasily. "What's he done this time?"

"In my advertisement for my valveless motor he turned the second v to a u!"

Canadian Syndicate For Distribution Of Maple Products

A movement is on foot to form a Canadian Syndicate to develop and distribute Canadian Maple products. It is proposed to erect cement tanks in the ground at various convenient points throughout the maple belt in Quebec province much on the lines of the Grain Elevator System, throughout the wheat area. Tanks will be of sufficient capacity to accommodate estimated average crop, and to have partitions to take charge of the 3 grades, for according to Government Bulletin No., 2B it is estimated that about 600 of the Canadian crop ranks as grade 3, 300 grade 2, and 100 grade 1. The promoters claim that the expense to the farmer for temporary containers, heavy freight charges and losses through breakage and leakage during transportation will be largely eliminated if this proposition goes through, by the use of tank cars that are to be used to convey the various grades of syrup to a central station as wanted, where same will be processed and packed in such form and quantities as may be demanded by the various markets and users of both foreign and domestic.

DANISH BUTTER IS COMING TO VANCOUVER

Vancouver.—A large cargo of butter is on its way from Denmark to Vancouver via the Panama Canal. It is shipped by the Royal Packet line which provides special refrigerating service and it is claimed that, owing to the very low wages being paid in Denmark, in spite of the fact that Denmark has to import much of the feed for her dary cows, it will be possible to lay this butter down in Vancouver to compete with butter from the Prairie provinces.

TRAVELLERS' HAVE CHANGE OF B. C. PURE FOOD SHOW

Vancouver, B.C., June.—The United Commercial Travellers were in charge of the Made-in-B.C. week of the Pure Food Show during the week of June 20-25. To induce Vancouver people to take a special interest in the display of British Columbia goods the travellers planned many novel features, one or more of which were staged every night, in conjunction with the dances.

The big feature of the week was the drawings, the first prize being a free trip for two persons to Prince Rupert and return. The second prize was a two weeks' holiday for two persons, all expenses paid, to Anderson Lake Lodge at D'Arcy on the P. G. E. Ry., one of the beauty spots of the Coast. There were special prizes each night featuring British Columbia resources, including a ton of coal, a crate of strawberries, case of canned goods and a hamper of groceries.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres

MONTREAL, June 29.—The feature of the produce market is the improved condition of the butter and egg market. In fact nearly all lines show strength. There is a keener demand for both butter and eggs for export. Butter has advanced in price and eggs are up to 40 cents per dozen since the supply is not as large and the demand is quite as good. Cheese is also stronger in virtue of the more active export market. The hog market retains the strength of the past two weeks with an indication of still higher prices. Dressed hogs, smoked meats and cooked hams are higher in price. Beef is weak with a surplice supply of front quarters and low prices are listed. There is no change in the fish market. Lard is still strong with a better demand.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Shortage of Tomatoes

CANNED GOODS.—To all appearances there is a shortage of canned tomatoes on the local market. Some of the dealers who have fair stocks on hand are taking advantage of the market and advancing the price to $1.65 per doz. for 2½'s. This shortage is reported for Montreal and district and so far is only known to be existant in this market. There seems to be reason to expect prices on canned tomatoes to go higher. Other lines of canned goods are unchanged in price.

Higher Prices For Peanuts

NUTS.—The feature of the nut market is the higher price quoted on peanuts on account of the keen demand for supplies. Walnuts retain their strength, but Brazil nuts are lower. Although the market for almonds has been strong with higher prices, some stocks are being offered at lower prices which show a decline of two cents per pound. There is a good demand for all lines of nuts.

Tomatoes Lower In Price

VEGETABLES.—There is very little change in the vegetable market. New potatoes are lower in price with a good demand. Cabbages are dearer, but cucumbers and tomatoes are lower in price. Old potatoes are selling at a very low price and a list price can hardly be given on account of the range of prices quoted. The vegetable market is busy with a good trade in all lines and good supplies arriving.

FRUIT.—The fruit market shows very little change apart from the additional list of imported fruits, such as peaches, plums and cherries. The list of prices show a downward tendency for peaches. Apples, oranges and grapefruit are unchanged in price. Strawberries are plentiful and lower in price. The market for fresh fruit is active with a good demand in all lines.

Rice Market Improved

RICE.—The rice market shows even stronger tendencies this week with an advance on Rangoon Rice quoted for delivery in July. B. is up 40 cents per 100 pounds to $4.65 and C. C. is up 35 cents, quoted at $4.35. The tendency in the rice market is upwards owing to a keener demand for supplies and an apparent shortage. The moratorium in Cuba has been raised and as a result a bigger market is open for rice and a call for supplies for that counttry will strengthen the rice market.

Teas Unchanged

TEAS.—There is very little change in the tea market. Japan teas are quoted a little lower on the primary market and reports state that large supplies of Japan teas are still in the hands of the growers. The tendency is towards lower prices. Ceylon and Indian teas are fairly steady, but this market too has a weak tendency on account of the reluctancy on the part of the buyers. There is a lack of confidence in the tea market which results in a congestion of supplies and prevents a stablization of the market. Quotations on teas remain unchanged.

Another Drop In Sugar

SUGAR.—As a result of the weaker market for raw sugar and lower prices on granulated in the United States, Canadian refiners have dropped their price 50 cents per hundred during the week, making a total decline of $1.75 per hundred in the last two weeks. The price now quoted on granulated sugar in Montreal is $8.75 per hundred. Owing to the weakness of the market and the declining price sales of sugar have not been large lately. There is a feeling of uncertainty in this market and buyers are only purchasing for immediate requirements.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 29.— With the exception of sugar there are few price changes recorded this week. Refined sugar was again reduced with the raw market continuing in a weak unsettled condition. Opening prices on new crop prunes and apricots have been named by some of the independant packers. Currants, teas, coffees, and nuts are holding at firm figures. Canned tomatoes and peas appear to be scarce with a liklihood of a short pack this season. Cereals are in a firm position with higher prices on flaked wheat. Rices in primary markets are strong under heavy European export business. There still appears to be considerable price cutting among wholesalers but there is a slight undertone for improvement.

Corn Beef Reduced

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—There appears to be a scarcity of canned touatoes and peas. Both these lines are apparently cleaned up and with the canners curtailing their pack there is likely to be a shortage this coming season. Then again, the reports of the pea crop are none too encouraging, but in this regard there is nothing definite to be learned until the crop is actually harvested. Gallon cans apples are selling freely at the moment at $4.75 to $5.00 per dozen. Clarks corn beef is reduced as follows: No. 1 tins are now $3.45 per dozen; No. 6 tins, $25 per dozen. Roast beef No. 1 tins $3.45 per dozen. Jutland sardines are offered at $7.75 per case.

New Prune Prices Named

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS.—Some independent packers have named opening prices on prunes. These prices are slightly lower at the coast, but with the duty, freight exchange and the four per cent. import Sales Tax, the prices figure out to practically on the same basis as present quotations on spot stocks. Quotations are also out on new crop apricots; these are considerably lower than last year's opening in spite of the fact that the crop is estimated at 40 per cent. less than normal. Quotations on new crop raisins are named at around 15 cents per pound, at the coast, but like prunes and apricots, the importation changes are very high, around five cents per pound, which will make the price around 20 cents providing the opening prices are maintained. There is every possibility of these prices dropping before the crop is ready for the market. There is also the likelihood of lower freight rates. There are no changes in spot quotations, but wholesalers are rapidly cleaning up their stocks.

Toronto.

NUTS.—There is little change in the nut situation. Almonds and walnuts continue in a strong position with shelled Bordeaux walnuts again advanced in France. Brazils are also showing more firmness with some wholesalers buying fairly heavy claiming that Brazils are good buying at present prices in anticipation for advanced prices in the fall.

Rice Market Strong

RICES.—The market continues to hold a strong position at primary points. This condition is due to the strong buying by European brokers. One New York firm recently filled an order for 500 tons and several orders for 100 ton lots. Most of the buying is for France, Germany, Belgium and Holland. Eastern rice is also strong and scarce. There are no changes in quotations on spot, but there is a decided lacking of irregular prices from wholesalers which was noticed some weeks ago.

Sugar Again Drops

SUGAR.—A further drop of 50 cents per hundred was announced on Friday last. This makes a reduction of $1.75 during the past two weeks and brings the Toronto price to $9.09 and $8.75 Montreal basis. Most of the refiners still remain closed, but it is felt with the lower prices and the cleaning up of second hand parcels that they will soon resume operations. The demand continues to be purely on the hand to mouth basis.

Teas Maintain Firmness

TEAS.—Indias and Ceylons continue to show firmness with the higher grades becoming more difficult to obtain at higher prices. Quotations on spot remain unchanged, but stocks cannot be replaced to sell at anywhere near the present quotations. A despatch from the London market says, "Tea auction supplies have been smaller. Indian grown when of good quality was well competed for, and firm to rather higher prices were paid for these, but bulk consisted of poor grades which were largely bought in, owing to the poor demand. Ceylon grown was of high class character, and naturally sold at advanced prices.

WINNIPEG MARKETS

WINNIPEG, June 29.— Quiet conditions prevail in the markets and prices throughout the list show few changes. The crop is coming along nicely but until the crop is assured merchants will continue to buy in small quantities. Canadian refiners have reduced their price on sugar but local wholesalers continue to sell at lower prices than refiners lists. There is a good demand for fresh vegetables and fruits. Lemons and strawberries have advanced in price. There is no change in canned goods prices. The nut market continues firm.

Tea Market Firmer

TEA.—Fine teas are reported scarce and very high and this is generally effecting the prices of the poorer grades. Locally however prices remain unchanged and teas are in light demand.

Sugar Prices Lower

SUGAR.—The raw sugar market, which has been very weak, is showing a steadier feeling. Canadian refiners have reduced their prics on refined sugar to $10.75 per hundred, but the majority of wholesalers are offering sugar at $10.25. Lower prices are expected very shortly by the trade.

Flour Market Unchanged

FLOUR.—The demand for flour has shown no change and buying continues on a hand to mouth basis.

Shelled Peanuts Firmer

NUTS.—There has been greater activity in the shelled peanut market and quotations have advanced slightly over last week. Bordeaux shelled walnuts remain firm. Shelled almonds show no matrial change. Due to the warm weather the demand is falling off. Pecans remain scarce and high while shelled Brazils show no change.

Jam Market Steady

JAMS.—Some new packed strawberry jam has arrived on the market and a noted improvement is being shown in the demand for same. Lower prices are not expected on jams this season, although sugar is lower, this is offset by the high cost of containers.

WHY HIS GROSS PROFIT WAS NOT $18,000.

into your till. This merchant, then, with sales of $60,000, had 180,000 transactions last year. Suppose that, because of figuring "around and about" or because he does not like to "split nickes", he loses half a cent of possible earnings on each sale. He is thereby out $900, in the year on this count alone.

This is why the man who figures down to the last fraction, and KNOWS why and how he does it, often makes money for no outwardly apparent reason. You may find the man who will not split nickles a few doors distant from the man who gets all he's entitled to, and more when the figures fall that way, but never less. The loose figuring man and he who figures accurately may both be good workers—equally busy from the collar down, you might say—but one makes money and the other just fails to make money.

It is free for all. You can take chances. It's a free country—yet. But the question is: Do you want to go into it on chance or on accurately scientific knowledge? It's entirely up to you.

In answer to an inquiry from a reader of Canadian Grocer in regard to the sales tax on package teas, itt might be stated that a tax of 1½ per cent. is levied on all sales from the wholesalers. Packers, too, in this instance are considered wholesalers, and furthermore this tax of 1½ per cent. must be shown on the invoice.

Trade Mark Safeguards The Export Future Of Danish Butter

About 275,000,000 pounds of butter are produced annually in Denmark and of this 240,000,000 pounds are exported yearly—must bear trade mark.

IN order to safeguard the export future of one of its most important products namely butter, the Danish Government now requires that all butter export shall bear the trade mark "Lur". This trade mark was originally owned by a private commerical organization, but it is now the sole property of the Danish Government.

3,700,000 Tons of Milk

The normal production of milk in that country has been placed at about 3,700,000 tons annually. There was a slight decrease in reproduction during the war, so the quantity is divided evenly throughout the year.

Of this quantity of milk about two per cent is used for the manufacture of cheese, about six per cent is consumed directly, and the remaining 92 per cent is used for making butter. About 275,000,000 pounds of butter are produced annually. Of this amount about 240,000,000 pounds are exported each year.

Must Bear Trade Mark

In order to be certain of foreign markets for this tremendous amount of butter each year, officials of the Danish Government realized that this product of their country must be such a superior quality class that the law was passed prohibiting the exporting of butter that did not bear the trade mark "Lur."

A Danish butter exporter, in order to place this trade mark on his product, must show that the butter he offers does not have a water content in excess of 16 per cent, that salt is the only preservative used, and that the butter has been made from milk and cream pasteurized at 176 degrees Fahrenheit, at least, in order to minimize any danger of tuberculosis.

Forfeits Right to Trade Mark

In addition to these requirements all dairies having the right to export butter, and use this trade mark are under obligation to submit periodically, samples of their product to a state controlled laboratory for tests. If the tests show that a dairy has produced butter of an inferior quality, that particular dairy loses the right to use the "Lur" trade mark, and that right cannot be regained until tests show that standard butter is again being produced.

Proper observance of the regulatons prescribed by the government for the use of this trade mark is also enforced by Government inspectors working at the dairies, storehouses and ports of shipment.

WHAT THE PROOFREADER DID

"Where's that infernal proofreader?" shouted an irate man with blood in each eye.

"He certainly would be right hard to find now," said the editor uneasily. "What's he done this time?"

"In the advertisement for my valveless motor he turned the second v into a u!"

CONVINCE YOUR CUSTOMERS

IN recent issues of Canadian Grocer, instances have been given, where merchants following the suggestion in this journal some weeks ago, by window displays, and in their advertisements have taken measures to convince their customers of the actual declines that have taken place in foodstuffs. Showing what can be purchased for a certain sum of money to-day, as compared with a year ago, has of ccurse been the main theme of window displays as well as of advertisements.

Retailers who followed a policy of this kind, in this time, have profited by so doing. It is up to every retailer to convince his buying public, that the dollar to-day is worth a good deal more than it was a year ago. The trouble has been that the public has persisted in refusing to believe this. With strange perversity it hesitates to spend money on a dropping market, while it would clean the shelves of every store, if there was an indication that prices were going up. One has only to review the history of the past few years to realize this.. War wages and war costs sent everything sky-high yet the public bought and bought. The drop in prices practically resulted in a buyers' strike.

In part this is the fault of retailers. The merchant knows that prices have come down, but he hasn't passed theinformation along. By a simple comparison of the prices of this time, 1920, with those of the same period in 1921, he could prove his contention in a moment, as some dealers already have done.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, June 29.— There are two outstanding features to the grocery market this week and for the most part other lines are steady. Sugar dropped another fifty cents per hundred. The weak condition of the raw market and the lower prices quoted in the United States is responsible for this break in the price. The rice market has been showing increased strength and conditions indicate further advances in price. Tomatoes, canned, appear to be short in this market and those holding stocks have advanced their price. Spices, cereals and dired fruits are quiet. Japan teas look as though they would go lower and India and Ceylons show no improvement. Coffee is steady and firm in price. New potatoes are lower, also tomatoes and cucumbers. There is a good demand for fresh vegetables. There is practically no change in the fruit market although there is a good call for all lines of fresh fruit. Strawberries are lower in price. Candles are reduced and lower price are quoted on cotton twines.

Higher Prices For Butter

Montreal.

BUTTER.—The strength which has characterized the local butter situation lately has been more pronounced within the past week and prices for pasteurized and the best creamery have scored a further advance of 2 cents per pound which is attributed to a keener demand for export. The receipts of butter locally continue to show an increase, but the demand has also increased. The trend of the market is towards higher prices. Fresh creamery prints are selling at 33 cents per pound and solids at 32 cents per pound.

Barrelled Meats Unchanged

Montreal.

BARRELLED MEATS.—There is no change in the prices of barelled meats. Although the hog market is higher the demand for barrelled meats is not large enough to warrant an advance at present. On the other hand the meat market is weak and a weaker tendency follows in barrelled meats.

Egg Prices Advance

EGGS.—A very firm feeling prevails in the egg market owing to smaller receipts, a decrease in production throughout the country and higher prices for export. There is also a big demand for local consumption. Prices quoted this week show an advance with a bigger margin betwen selected and No. 1 stock Selected eggs are selling at 40 cents per dozen.

Low Prices on Beef

FRESH MEATS.—The hog market proved firm throughout the week and prices stand unchanged at the advanced quotations made one week ago. Selected light weight hogs, weighed off cars are selling at from 13½ to 14 cents per pound. The tendency of the market, however is towards a higher price on account of the demand for supplies. The demand for dressed hogs is very good with an advance in the price to 21 cents per pound. Other cuts of fresh pork are unchanged in price. The beef market is very weak with lower prices quoted on front quarters since the demand has been almost entirely for hind quarters. The over supply of front quarters on the market has caused a drop in the prices to as low as from 7 to 8 cents per pound. The beef market throughout is very weak.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, June 29.—The produce and provision markets continue with a firm tone with tendencies for advance in most lines. Butter and cheese are in a strong position under stimulus of export buying and although prices are unchanged during the week there are strong tendencies for an advance. Lack of receipts is holding the egg market firm with a likelihood for higher prices. Pork cuts are quoted higher with the hog market showing an inclination for an easier condition. Cooked meats, smoked hams and bacon are advanced in price. Fish quotations are fairly well maintained. Spring chickens are lower but heavy fowl are higher.

Butter Holds Firm

Toronto,

BUTTER.—The market continues with a firm tone and although quotations are practically unchanged there is a sentiment for an increase. The best quality creamery prints are quoted at 32 to 33 cents with the same quality in cartons at 34 cents. Second grades are bringing around 31 cents.

Hogs Slightly Easier

FRESH MEATS.—After the big jump in prices of live hogs the first part of last week, the market toward the end of the week showed signs of easing. It was claimed that outside buyers were the cause of the advance, but when this competition was not in evidence at the end of the week the market weakened with prices on the fed and watered basis around $13.25 per hundred. Cattle also showed signs of weakness, due particularly to the fact that most of the offerings were of poor quality and also the small demand for fresh meats since the hot weather commenced. Practically all fresh pork cuts are advanced two cents per pound but beef, veal and lamb show no changes.

Excise Duty on Alcohol

Extract manufacturers have been successful in having the recent increase in excise duty on alcohol reduced to $2.40 per gallon, extracts to be manufactured under Government supervision and the manufacturers to pay the cost of the inspector.

It wil be remembered that under the recent Budget ruling, the excise duty on alcohol for extract manufacturing was advanced to $9.00 per gallon, the former being $2.40 per gallon with an additional $2.00 per gallon as a Luxury Tax. This increase would have had the effect of advancing the price of extracts considerably. Manufacturers sent a deputation to Ottawa pointing out that the business would be ruined if the increased duty were allowed to stand and also that druggists would be able to manufacture and sell extracts at a much lower price, which they considered a discrimination against their business.

The result of the conference between Sir Henry Drayton and the delgation was as mentioned above, which practically leaves extracts in the same position as before.

Eliminates the Excessive Costs of Delivery

A certain class of trade, he states, is getting tired of the cash and carry idea, and is returning to the service stores—keeping stocks low, but volume of turnover is good.

VANCOUVER (Special).— P. A. Woodward, of Woodward's Department Store, in conversing with a Canadian Grocer representative on the profit in the grocery section of this business, said that in the old days there never was any profit in the grocery department. "Three years ago," he added, "we were almost frightened to investigate the delivery costs which were chargeable to our grocery section. When we did, we decided then and there that a change would be made. We never did make a practice of charge business; so it was no innovation for us to sell for cash, but we did do as much delivering as the rest, and we found it was too much. We opened our cash and carry department to get rid of our excessive delivery costs, and to make it worth while for the house-wife to carry home her purchases. We cut prices closer. We don't make a big profit on our grocery section now, but it is a certainty that we do not lose like we used to when we were delivering anything and everything to all parts of the city.

Both Don't Work Well

"I cannot see how any departmental store could operate successfully both a Cash and Carry and a Service grocery department. To me it would appear that the argument and fricton between the house and unreasonable customers would result in an actual loss of many customers. I know of many big departmental stores, both in Canada and the United States, that do not carry groceries at all. The Bon Marche in Seattle discontinued its grocery section entirely.

A Refuge of Failures

"As far as I observe," said the merchant, "there are few grocers making money, and there are just as many making it now as in any other normal times. It is the hardest business in the world to conduct at a profit, and it is somehow considered the easiest. Most of the grocers' troubles are brought on him, not by outside influences, but by fellow grocers. The worst competition in the world is unintelligent competition, and that is what the grocer is faced with, the competition of those in the grocery business who are not grocers.

"At the present time the grocery business seems to be the refuge of the failures in any other lines. Until the level of competency is lifted in the grocery business there will be many failures and much unsettlement by reason of these failures.

Collect for Service

"In every section of Vancouver at the present time there are a few grocers who are being successful and making a good living. They don't all conduct their businesses on the same basis that we do. Many of them give service, and the wise and successful ones charge and collect for the service they give. The rest try to sell as low as the store giving no service and no charge accounts and yet these things. In my estimation that is a very weak policy. There will always be those unwilling to carry home their purchase and the successful grocer in the outskirts or elsewhere is catering to that portion of the community and collecting from those demanding service, the just and reasonable toll for the service.

Personal Contact Counts

"The small grocer has one great advantage over a large impersonal establishment. He has the personal contact with his customers. He knows their likes and dislikes. If a mistake is made, he has the opportunity to make explanations. The small grocer is almost entirely free from loss through theft. The large stores are robbed every day. The cash and carry, self-serve system lends itself to petty thievery, and we know that some goods are stolen quite regularly. The large stores, sending out great numbers of wagons and deliveries, of course lose a great deal by theft also, so probably the self-serve system may result not in an increase in theft, but only in a different method. The small retailer is free from most of this. He is also in personal contact with his clerks and has a better chance of training his help to his methods, and superintending their contact with the public."

Rigid Rules Essential

After years of experience Mr. Woodward is convinced that it pays to have rigid rules in a store regarding sampling and theft, and to have them rigidly enforced. He instanced a case where a man picked a hand-rolled chocolate from a display and ate it. The clerk reminded him that "it wasn't done" and the man demanded to know whether the clerk was insinuating that he was stealing. Mr. Woodward was summoned to the counter, and he asked the man who was getting abusive, whether he took candy from the counter. He answered in the affirmative. He was next asked whether he had paid for it, and the reply was "No." "Well," said Mr. Woodward, "there is nothing else to it. You stole." The customer started bluffing and threatening but was ordered from the store. There is a rule in the store against uninvited sampling, and the clerks know that it is enforced. For other shoplifters the invariable practice in the store when one is caught, unless an old offender, is to take a signed confession from the guilty one, stating that on the certain date, at a certain counter she stole a certain article, and get the signature. Mr. Woodward states that in all his experience they have never had a person up twice The signed confession being sufficient deterrent to further thieving.

SALES MANAGER OF CHRISTIE-BROWN CO. PASSES AWAY

Toronto, June — The death occurred at the Victoria Memorial Hospital of Harry C. Scully, on Saturday, June 25. The late Mr. Scully, who was 54 years of age, was for many years sales manager of the Christie Brown Co., biscuit manufacturers. He was also vice-chairman of the food products' association, and a member of the committee that took up the matter of the pure food building at the Canadian National Exhibition. He was prominent in masonry having been a past master of the order and a life member of Alpha lodge Toronto. He was also a member of the Scottish rite. He is survived by his wife and six daughters. The funeral took place on Monday, June 27, and was conducted under masonic auspices. It was very largely attended.

COCOANUT STOCKS LIGHT

A New York report has the following to say of the cocoanut market. "The market for Ceylon desiccated during the week was a quiet one for the most part. New arrivals were light and nearly everything has been sold or was owned by dealers. Spot stocks of macaroon and medium are still very small and are likely to remain so for time. Chip and thread were quiet, and while stocks are by no means large demand has been light and there is no difficulty yet in filling orders. Futures turned up a little, then eased off, and at the close they are little changed from the previous week's close.

DAYTON

--she says good-bye
--not au revoir

It's her last visit to the grocer who wastes her shopping time

Standing in a waiting line before the grocer's counter is tiresome, irritating, wasteful!
The housewife of to-day is a business woman, who has no time to fritter away over a grocer whose service is held up by lack of equipment.

The Dayton with its swivel base and dozen other exclusive features gives the fastest service of any scale in the world. But ONE Dayton cannot do the work of TWO.

You have a "rush hour" in your store—take the best care of it. It's a precious asset. Place a Dayton at every convenient point on your counters. Clerks, then, will not be standing idle and helpless on one side of the counter while customers form a second waiting line on the other side.

Daytons save motions, minutes and money. They build trade, establish confidence of customers, make business easier for the merchant and provide a system which is positively accurate and saves profits.
